U. S. Troops for Benton's Body

J. R. MURPHY FIN. COM. HEAD

STORIES OF VILLA DISAGREE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—A resolution seeking to ascertain what the administration is doing to protect Americans and other foreigners in Mexico was introduced in the House today by Representative Airey, Republican, of Pennsylvania.

The resolution requests the President, if not incompatible with the public interest, to send to Congress "all information that may be in possession of the State Department regarding the treatment of citizens of the United States and other countries in respect to their safety and the security of their property, and to inform the House what action, if any, has been taken for the protection of American citizens and other persons in Mexico."

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—The possibility of sending American troops across the border to recover the body of William S. Benton, the Englishman, executed by order of General Villa, should Villa continue in his refusal to surrender the remains, was discussed today by President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan. It was agreed not to take any drastic action until Great Britain informs this government of her stand in the matter.

The British embassy was informed at midnight that Villa has refused to give up Benton's body and this information was cabled to London by Ambassador Spring-Rice. It is expected that the British Foreign Office immediately will cable its desires in the case here to be transmitted to the State Department. Should Great Britain continued in her demand for Benton's body the United States would be forced to send troops into Juarez to recover the remains.

Secretary of State Bryan stated that all efforts to find Gustave Bauch, the German-American, who was sentenced to death as a spy and removed to Chihuahua by Villa's orders, have been ineffectual.

BELIEVE BAUCH SLAIN.

Consul Letcher at Chihuahua reported today that Villa says he does not know where Bauch is and that he has not heard from him for the past ten days. This is the third contradictory statement emanating from Villa in as many days and State Department officials now believe that Bauch has been murdered and his body buried in Juarez. This, they think, is one reason why Villa does not want Benton's body disinterred, as such action might result in the discovery of the bodies of the four

Bay State Liner Hartford Caught By Ice in Sound

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—The Bay State line steamship Hartford, bound from Providence, R. I., to New York with 100 passengers on board, was caught in an ice floe in Long Island Sound off Throgs' Neck early today and rendered helpless. The steamer Providence of the Fall River line reported the accident and tugs were dispatched to the aid of the ice-bound vessel. Captain Ira Kelly of the Hartford reported to the Providence that all on board were safe.

The Hartford is owned by the Hartford & New York Transportation Company and operated by them between Hartford and New York except when ice makes transportation on the Connecticut River impossible. She is now in operation on the Bay State line between New York and Providence, having been withdrawn from the Hartford service after she was taken from the local line.

Before the tugs arrived the Hartford had been able to free herself from the grip of the ice. She arrived at her pier several hours late.

Alleged Slayer Vanishes in Court

John J. Larkins walked out of the South Boston Municipal Court today while his trial for manslaughter was pending, although supposedly held on $1000 bail, and was ordered "defaulted" by Judge Fallon when he failed to appear a few minutes later.

Larkin lives at No. 6 Villa lane, Brookline. He was arrested charged with running over and killing William Smyrle of No. 6 Marble street, Roxbury, while driving a brewery wagon over the Dover street bridge.

Allow Fitzwilliam to Deny Love Charge

BOSTON, Feb. 25.—Although the divorce suit brought by Alexander Broderick Leslie-Melville, a millionaire banker, was dropped yesterday the case was called in divorce court today in order to allow Earl Fitzwilliam, the co-respondent, and Mrs. Leslie-Melville to deny the charges under oath.

Nellie Guertin Is Sentenced to Prison

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—Prison sentences were meted out today to Nellie Grant Guertin of Boston and John Adison Patron, who were convicted of conspiracy in connection with Mrs. Guertin's suit for $75,000 against A. Sakicak company. Mrs. Guertin must serve eight months and pay a fine of $1. Patron was sent up for one year and given a similar fine. Patron took all the blame for the conspiracy upon himself, but Judge Thomas held that Mrs. Guertin was also guilty.

To Probe Death at McLean Hospital

Mrs. Nettie Saunders of Lowell, fiancee of Frank Lazelle, the engineer, whose death at the McLean Hospital at Waverly was said to have been due to scarlet fever, today declared her belief that he was the victim of violence at the hospital. She retained former Mayor James E. O'Donnell of Lowell to investigate her fiance's death.

McGraw was unable to be present at the reception and luncheon given the visiting baseball players at the Savoy Hotel.

Find $300 Necklace in Mill Rag Room

HOLYOKE, Feb. 25.—Mrs. Wasyl Burke found a necklace in the rag room of a local paper mill. A foreman offered her fifteen cents for it. She refused and wore the jewel and then discarded it. Then the police heard of it and valued the diamonds in the necklace at $300. There is no clew to the identity of the owner.

Vandyke Beard for Curely, So He Says

Mayor Curley announced today that he is going to "grow" or "raise" a Vandyke. This announcement was made after the Mayor had received a visit from Michael O'Leary, chairman of the Democratic State Committee, at City Hall today. The Mayor, who has received many compliments for his facial change, has always had a smooth face, except for three days, some ten years ago, when he nursed a short stubble on his chin.

Snow Shovel Case in Superior Court

Michael J. Brennan of Somerville, an Elevated motorman, who appealed a $3 fine in the Somerville court on the charge of failing to clear the snow from his sidewalk, came into court again today, pleaded not guilty when the case was called in Superior Court, and was held in $100 on a continuance until tomorrow.

Gresham Picks Up Disabled Schooner

The schooner Addie M. Lawrence of Portland, Captain Gardner, which was seen yesterday off Nauset, Cape Cod, flying signals of distress, was picked up today by the revenue cutter Gresham and towed into Provincetown leaky and short of provisions. The schooner left Philadelphia February 18 and was buffeted by heavy seas from the start.

Urge New 8-Hour Paper Mill Bill

A bill similar to that advocated by Charles Sumner Bird last year to establish an eight-hour working day for workers in the paper industry was considered by the legislative Committee on Labor today. The committee was assured by Frederick T. Fuller that Mr. Bird and the Progressive party have lost no interest in the bill.

Take Curley's Name from Roll of House

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—The resignation of Representative James Curley of the Twelfth Massachusetts District, recently elected Mayor of Boston, today was transmitted to Speaker Clark by Governor Walsh of Massachusetts. It was read in the House and Curley's name was stricken from the roll.

This automatically disposed of the Mann resolution calling for the dropping of Curley's name, which was sent to the Judiciary Committee.

MURPHY MADE FIN. COM. HEAD

John R. Murphy of Charlestown was today named as chairman of the Finance Commission by Governor Walsh. The Governor sent the nomination to the Executive Council alone with a number of other appointments. Under suspension of rules by the Council Mr. Murphy was at once confirmed.

Mr. Murphy is named to succeed John A. Sullivan, who resigned the Finance Commission chairmanship to become Corporation Counsel of Boston. Mr. Murphy is one of the best known Democrats in Boston, has been prominently name in connection with a number of big jobs and entered the mayoralty fight last December only to withdraw early in the race.

Other nominations made by the Governor today were:

Mrs. Mabel Hunt Slater, the Boston society leader, to be trustee of the Massachusetts General Hospital —the first woman ever appointed to the office. Mrs. Slater's great grandfather was one of the hospital's founders.

George Leonard, reappointed police clerk at Springfield.

Dr. Cary C. Bradford of Southbridge, appointed medical examiner in Worcester County.

Mrs. Mary S. Dewey of Cambridge, to the State Board of Labor and Industries.

Pardon Granted to Broker Mulliken

The pardon committee of the Executive Council voted to recommend pardon for Alfred A. Mulliken, formerly of Newton, who is serving a term of from three to five years in State Prison on a charge of larceny.

Mulliken was in the firm of Cram-Mulliken & Company, and was charged with misappropriating funds, running a bucket shop, conspiracy to steal and larceny.

At the meeting of the Executive Council later, the pardon was

BACK BAY SUITES IN FLAMES

One woman was carried down a ladder after a narrow escape from a burning room. Three firemen, trapped by the flames on the top floor, were near death when rescued by comrades, and more than a score of persons fled half-clad into snow-covered streets, early today, when fire swept through the three upper floors of the Riverside View, a fashionable apartment house at No. 114 The Fenway. The loss was estimated at $35,000.

The fire spread panic among scores of students in the New England Conservatory of Music, the Boston Normal Art School, Simmons and Emerson Colleges, living in apartment houses in Hemenway street at the rear. Flames shot from the upper windows of the burning building across the street and hundreds of persons made preparations to move their effects into the street.

Three alarms were sounded. The flames gained tremendous headway and gave the firemen a hard battle. It was first reported that several persons had been trapped on the upper floors, and several firemen risked their lives only to find they had escaped.

Miss Mary Hagan, sister-in-law of Attorney John P. Feeney, had a narrow escape. She was asleep in a rear room in suite 3 on the third floor. Mrs. Margaret Feeney and Miss Frances Newman occupied other rooms.

The noise in the house awakened them. The door of Miss Hagan's room was locked and the other women could not get in. Miss Hagan's way to the door was blocked by flames and the only means of escape was the window.

Mrs. Feeney and Miss Newman were assisted to the street and told the firemen of Miss Hagan's peril. The crew of Ladder 15 raised a ladder to the window and found Miss Hagan at the sill almost overcome by smoke. She was carried to the Stuart Club.

It was after saving Miss Hagan that Captain Steagle and Fireman Conway and Ladderman Baldwin nearly lost their lives trying to find others who were supposed to have been trapped on the top floor.

Fine Militant Suffragette.

LONDON, Feb. 25.—Mrs. Mary Lindsey, the militant suffragette who horsewhipped Lord Worsdale, a sixty-eight-year-old Tory, in Ingleton Railway station a week ago, was fined $10 and costs today.

CURLEY OUSTS SIX IN PARK DEPARTMENT

Following his promises to reduce the expenses of the city by reducing the number of city employees, Mayor Curley has again wielded the department axe. Today six employees of the Park and Recreation Department were notified that their services would not be required for the next six months. This suspension practically means a removal.

George F. Clarke, secretary and clerk of the department, who has been in the city service thirty-nine years, was the first to be notified. His salary was $3,000. Charles O. Lawrence, an accountant, drawing a salary of $2,500, was also suspended after being in the service since 1883.

The four other members of the department who received notices of dismissal were: James W. Chapman, $1600; Chalmers W. DeNan, $1400; John F. McCarthy, $1600; and Arthur A. Shurtleff, $2500. Shurtleff, who was a landscape architect, was one of those who had his salary increased by Mayor Fitzgerald from $1800 to $2600.

TOLD MRS. RANTOUL OF "BIG MISTAKE"

Thomas Brackett Bassett of the Beacon street set, son-in-law of former Governor Draper and intimate friend of the Edward L. Rantoulls, testified as the first witness on the husband's side of the Rantoul divorce case at East Cambridge today and declared that Mrs. Lois Burnett Rantoul protested to him that she could not give up the love of "Chippie" Rumrill, classmate at Harvard with Gannett and Rantoul.

Rumrill himself, who is more formally known as Chester Chapin Rumrill, the Springfield millionaire, auto let and yachtsman, was sworn as one of the husband's witnesses when court opened, but he was told that he would not have to take the stand until tomorrow, so he left the court house. It had remained to would have heard his classmate Gannett say, among other things:

"She (Mrs. Rantoul) said that while she cared for her husband she did not love him, and had not loved him for some time. I said: 'I think you can give up your feelings and love your husband again.' She said, 'You don't know what you are asking me to give up. You are in love yourself and about to be married in a month and you ought to know what love is.'"

KNEW WHAT LOVE WAS.

Gannett said in answer to questions, that they were referring to her love for Rumrill, and added:

"That one remark she made one shadowed everything else in my mind. That denial of ever giving up her love, it made me feel confident about who loved Rumrill. I had a pretty good idea of what love meant right down myself."

That talk Gannett had with Mrs. Rantoul was on October 17, 1911. Gannett married Miss Dorothy Draper on November 21 the same year so, as he said, he had "a pretty good idea what love was."

Another part of Gannett's testimony made the spectators prick up

SCORE HURT IN BROOKLYN TROLLEY CRASH.

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—More than a score of men and women were injured in a rear-end trolley car collision at Flatbush avenue, near Seventh avenue, Brooklyn, today. Six of the injured were seriously hurt. The accident was caused by the icy tracks, on which the brakes of the second car failed to work.

Beautifully Furnished Room With Board Optional

Such is the beginning of many Boston American "Want Ads" which appear under the heading of "Furnished Rooms." Nor are these advertisements unusual in any sense.

It is often the case that a family finds itself with an extra room for which it seeks a congenial occupant.

Sometimes these rooms are in handsomely furnished apartments, and just as frequently in homes of comfort and refinement conveniently and desirably located.

If you have some special requirements, however, or are seeking some particular location, you may make assurance doubly sure by supplementing your search with a "Rooms Wanted" ad of your own.

Take pencil and paper now and frame an advertisement. When it is ready see that it is sent without delay to any of the American's "Want Ad" Stations, the branch office at 264 Washington street, or the their cars. He said Mrs. Rantoul talked with him about a certain class day (Harvard, of course). Mr. Bennett thought it was the '07 class day, but he was not sure. Anyhow he said:

She also, Rantoul told me, that A. and Rumrill had been more afraid of the thing anybody else in the world."

Mr. Rantoul's lawyer, Thomas Hunt, raised quickly:

replied Gannett.

But Gannett would not recall having seen "these two" together on any occasion calculated to cause jealousy.

Gannett made only the faintest attempt at this cross-examination. He knows the family as well and he was at the house more than once and he used to see Mrs. Rantoul and Rumrill at the theatre. In his direct examination this witness was very unfortunate.

DATE IN WIFE'S DIARY.

An interesting point in the way of information and a source of absorbing interest to the Cambridge set at that time was thrown by Mr. Gannett's statement that he fixed the date of his visit to Mrs. Rantoul by the fact that his wife—former Governor Draper's daughter—wrote it in her diary.

Under cross-examination Mr. Gannett admitted he was a close friend of the Rantoul family, as well as of Rumrill. This was "Chippie" Rumrill's debut as the Rantoul case so far as court proceedings go. As the previous day he was summoned by the husband's side when Mrs. Rantoul's name was mentioned in a query. But, as no testimony for the husband was put on owing to an abrupt suspension of Judge Keating, Rumrill did not get to the witness stand.

On account of the prominence given Rumrill's name in the first hearing and a renewal of that prominence at the hearing that, were wives interested in the appearance of the polo club man, autoist and yachtsman when Mrs. Rantoul had disclosed her gave her earrings and diamonds, and whom she loved.

RUMRILL SWORN.

Under Attorney for Mr. Rantoul, had a summons served on Rumrill yesterday. Rumrill was one of the first on hand today at East Cambridge court.

The first the spectators knew of his being summoned was when he was witnesses for the husband's side were called upon to stand up and be sworn. Mr. Rantoul stood up at the same time. Next to him stood his sisters, Miss Harriett and Miss Edith Rantoul, the latter's husband, Dr. Lund, at the other end of the line stood "Chippie" Rumrill, Harvard classmate and clubmate of Mrs. Rantoul's and for years esteemed as his friend and confidant.

Rantoul and Rumrill did not look at each other. Mrs. Rantoul was in an anteroom. Later she came in. She appeared pale.

Spectators noted that Rantoul and Rumrill are about the same height. Maybe Rumrill in the same class at Harvard they are naturally of about the same age. Rantoul was in an olive-hued suit, with a green tie. Rumrill wore a darker suit, with purple tie.

The proceedings began with the continuation of the reading of the deposition made by Mrs. Esther L. Cunningham of Rye, N. Y., sister of Mrs. Rantoul. Mrs. Cunningham declined to appear as a witness in person as the former hearing, but consented to give a deposition. She would not appear at this hearing, it is said, and so the deposition had to be read.

CONFESSED HER LOVE.

Mrs. Cunningham in her deposition was very emphatic in her testimony concerning her sister.

Mrs. Cunningham told about a number of conversations which she had with Mrs. Rantoul at Beverly Farms, at Cambridge, and at Peterboro, N. H., in 1911 and 1912.

She said her sister Lois confessed to her that "she was in love with another man." Mrs. Cunningham gave the name of the man reluctantly. She said it was Chester C. Rumrill. She further testified that her sister told her she "loved Rumrill's husband" and loved Mr. Rumrill.

Q.—Did she say anything about divorcing Mr. Rantoul? A.—She did not discuss divorce.

Q.—Did she say anything about remarriage? A.—Yes, she said she believed that sometime in the future she might divorce. She also stated in one of the conversations that she believed in love.

Q.—What did you think of Mr. Edward Rantoul? A.—I thought him a very good husband, but a rather moderate husband, and a staunch friend.

Q.—Did you ever see him abuse your sister? A.—No.

Q.—Did you ever see him treat her or use her roughly? A.—No.

Q.—What was his attitude toward his children? A.—He was very devoted to them. He was very fond of them. He remained with them all he could.

Other circumstances Mrs. Cunningham testified to in her deposition that she had several conversations with Chester Hunt and Mr. Rantoul and that her disposition was taken at the Belmont Hotel in New York in 1912.

Q.—Did you ever tell your sister about the two Rantoulds? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you ever tell anybody that you would sooner see your sister Lois dead than to see her divorced and remarried? A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you ever say you would do all you could to prevent her divorce? A.—I did.

Q.—Didn't you say to someone that Edward and Lois could not live together? A.—I did.

Q.—Didn't your sister tell you that Edward was always rowing with her? A.—He said they both were to blame together.

Q.—Did she say that Edward would make her sorry one day? A.—She said: Not that I remember.

Q.—Didn't she say also that Edward treated her harshly. A.—She said they quarreled together.

Q.—Didn't she say she had admitted lately given up Mr. Rumrill in order to save the family? A.—She did not say any of the first interviews I had with her.

Q.—Didn't she say she had given up "this man"? A.—No.

Q.—Didn't she tell you that she had told her husband that she loved him? A.—No, she told me she did not tell her husband until he had found it out himself.

Q.—Did you know on whom you were confiding a secret, whether for your sister or her husband? A.—I simply volunteered my testimony in the cause of justice. I considered it an act of justice.

Q.—Did you recall the time that you asked her to go away on a trip with you? A.—I did not. She refused to leave, as she was afraid that Edward would take the children? A.—She said that it would weaken her case if she went away.

Q.—Did you tell her that you did believe in divorce? A.—I did.

Q.—Did she ever say to you that she was trying to get Rumrill out of her mind? A.—She did.

Q.—Did she not say that divorce was sleazy and that when they were people that together when they did not love each other? A.—She might have said it.

NEVER CALLED HER "SPY."

Q.—Did she not say that the reason she did not talk freely with you about her affairs was because you had betrayed her confidence to Edward Rantoul and had reported it to him? A.—No, she never told me so.

Q.—Did she not say that you were telling stories to him? A.—She may have as late as December, 1912, but not before.

Q.—Don't you know that she suspected you as being a spy for Rantoul? A.—No.

Q.—Is it a fact that she not only suspected you as being a spy for Rantoul, but called you a spy for Rantoul? A.—She never accused me of being a spy.

Q.—Was your father here in the room? A.—No, he refused to come here.

Q.—Was he willing that you should come here and testify against your sister? A.—He asked me not to.

(This is still another deposition testimony the "room" referred to is not the court room, but the New York hotel room where the deposition had been taken.)

Q.—Hasn't she complained to you about your talking over her affairs with various people? A.—No.

Q.—Haven't you said that she was like a stone wall, as far as your being able to influence her? A.—I don't remember. I may have.

Q.—Have you ever taken the trouble to read your sister's charges? A.—No.

Q.—Did you ever inquire as to the statement of the physician? A.—No.

Q.—Have your sister ever tell you that Edward's regard was all physical? A.—No.

In reading the direct and re-direct portions of the deposition Mrs. Cunningham was impersonated by Wilford E. Rand, Jr., of the law firm of Sprague, Russell, who is junior counsel for Mr. Rantoul. Mr. Rand stood up in the room of Mrs. Cunningham. He is a great big curly-headed young man, and he is an excellent player. Mr. Hunt asked the questions, which he addressed from the deposition. Attorney Preston was counsel for Mrs. Rantoul, and he cross-examined.

Americans and Englishmen who have disappeared in the last fortnight.

In order to be fully prepared for emergencies in Yera Cruz and Mexico City, Secretary of the Navy Daniels today ordered the transport Prairie to sail from Pensacola, Fla., about March 1, with field hospital.

The Prairie will go directly to Vera Cruz and await orders. Her arrival will increase the American marines in Mexican waters about 3,000 men. The Prairie will be a floating hospital, force being held in the capital from Vera Cruz in the event of trouble in Mexico City. The Prairie will reach Vera Cruz the latter part of next week.

JUNTA WIRES PROTEST.

The Constitutionalist junta in Washington today wired both General Carranza and Villa urging the immediate surrender of the body of William S. Benton, who, the junta declared, was not of the party announced by the Mexican federal officials to Villa against the killing of the British subject.

The most regrettable incident from every viewpoint." Pershing said. "Even though justified in the view of Villa, Villa should have restrained himself in view of the political effect the killing might have."

According to despatches from Mexico today President Huerta ordered Minister of War Blanquet to make an immediate and thorough investigation of the murder of Clemente Vergara, the American officer who was hanged by Federal soldiers near Chihuahua. Blanquet in turn notified General Tellez, commander of the northern military zone, that Vergara's slayers must be found at once and executed.

REGRET VERGARA'S DEATH.

This action was taken without awaiting any demand from the American government. Government officials personally expressed deep regret over the death of Vergara, though some thought that he was killed by a roving band of rebels after he had been released by the Federals. It is said that the Federals had placed on the government troops in order to offset in the United States the criticism aimed at the Huerta regime by the execution of William S. Benton.

That the British government fears the United States will be unable to protect English Consul Percival, of Galveston, investigating the death of William S. Benton, if he crosses the border into Mexico was indicated today by a statement made in the British House of Commons by Under Secretary Acland of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. A representative of the government has been sent to the Mexican border, the statement of Benton's death," he said, "but the Foreign Office is not prepared to send him into a disturbed district unless assured he will be safe.

The statement was made in reply to a question as to how soon the government could present an official report on Benton's death.

Statements were made by friends of Benton that Benton's body was not buried after the execution" in Juarez, but burned.

Further statements were found today in the stories told by Villa and his aides as to the disposition of Benton's body. The Juarez officers informed Benton's friends when a request was made for the body that Benton had been buried in an unmarked grave in Juarez and that it would be impossible to find it. Villa, however, made this statement today in Chihuahua.

"Benton's body was brought to Chihuahua on my train encased in a fine coffin and buried in the best way with all honors, including the services of followers, etc., and a cross to mark the grave."

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—Lady Constance Stewart Richardson made her debut in a cafe here as a cabaret dancer, coming out on the floor barefooted. She was greeted with cheers which were joined in by her husband, Edward Stewart Richardson, and the chorus girls as she danced.

She retired smiling and bowing, but responded to the encore, although her feet pained her. Her husband took a bottle of club soda and proceeded to bathe them. This process still was in progress when the waiter entered bearing a tray of champagne. The waiter, amused, dared to laugh. The laugh angered Richardson and he punched the waiter in the eye.

The trouble ended soon, the foot washing was resumed and the dance went on.

Among those giving dinners in the restaurant at the time were Mrs. Benjamin S. Guinness, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Hapgood, Mr. and Mrs. Amos Pinchot, Nicholas Biddle, Prince Troubetskoy and Richard Harding Davis.

THINK GIRL IN STAGE COMPANY IS MISS ARLIN

The Boston office of the W. J. Burns Detective Agency was notified by telegraph today that the Montreal office had located a girl in a theatrical company in Montreal who closely answers the description of the missing Mertie Eleanor Arlin. The notification accompanied an urgent request that photographs of the Arlin girl be rushed to Montreal.

That Miss Arlin is in a Jersey City retreat, following her rescue from a "living hell" in that city by social settlement workers, is the declaration of Miss Rose L. Livingston, the "Angel of New York's Chinatown," who has rescued more than 600 young girls from the Chinese resorts and the cadets.

Following the offer of a $500 reward for Miss Arlin's discovery alive, made by her mother in a letter sent from Colebrook, N. H., thanking the AMERICAN for its work in trying to solve the mystery surrounding her daughter's disappearance, the Jersey City clew looks promising.

Miss Livingston is in Boston to address a Ford Hall meeting tonight on the question of equal suffrage.

The following is Mrs. Arlin's letter:

Colebrook, N. H.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—I wish personally to thank the newspapers of Boston for their assistance in the search for my daughter, and to request you to grant me the additional favor of publishing notice of the reward that is now offered for her discovery. The sum of five hundred dollars ($500) will be paid to any person or persons who shall furnish information leading to the discovery of Mertie Eleanor Arlin alive. This reward stands open for one week from date and will then be withdrawn.

All information to be communicated directly to me in person or by letter. Sincerely yours,

MRS. JANE ARLIN.

Grain Men Opposed to Inspection Bill

The Grain Board of the Boston Chamber of Commerce and nearly 100 retail grain men from all over New England voted today against allowing an additional charge for reconsigning a freight car in transit and against any charge being made for "spotting"—the placing of cars on spur tracks. The conference almost opposed the Macomber bill providing uniform inspection of grain all over the country.

ONE KILLED IN $150,000 LYNN GARAGE BLAZE

Stephen Authes, a crippled watchman, employed by the Essex Auto Company, lost his life in a $150,000 fire which burned out the company's three-story garage and repair shop at No. 170 Broad street, Lynn, today. Authes' body was found huddled near the head of the top stairway.

Ten firemen were carried down when the second floor fell in. They were rescued by fellow firemen.

Ladderman William Ring of Ladder 6 was burned on the hands and face, rescuing four of the men who were endangered.

Ladderman Alston Gray suffered a broken leg in the crash of the second floor.

One hundred automobiles were burned.

Four families were driven out into the cold from tenements in Farrar street, in the rear.

Twenty-six horses owned by the Lynn office of the American Express Company were rescued barely in time when a falling wall endangered their stable on Farrar street.

Hunt's lunch, on the ground floor, was damaged and fifteen patrons were driven from their morning toast and eggs.

The firemen were imperilled by the presence of a 500-gallon tank of gasolene. Fire Chief Chase refused to let his men enter the building when flames threatened this tank.

By 3 o'clock the firemen had the flames under control.

Sunshine Tempers February Blasts

Sunshine to melt the ice and temper the wintry blasts to Boston's shivering shorn lambs gave Boston today its first moderately enjoyable day in several weeks. According to the weather man the average daily temperature for the past seventeen days has been 11 degrees below normal, making the longest period of extreme cold weather on record in Boston. This month is the coldest February since 1907.

The first day of Lent started out early with a zero temperature, but the sun had the effect of sending the mercury up to 25 at noon. The forecast is for fair tonight, unsettled tomorrow with a slowly rising temperature.

SAYS HUB FIRE LOSS IS WORST IN THE WORLD

Boston is the worst city in the world from the standpoint of fire losses, Chairman C. H. Blackall of the Chamber of Commerce committee on fire prevention, told the Legislative Committee on Metropolitan Affairs at a hearing today on the Chamber's fire prevention bill. The bill was also urged by President Coolidge and other members of the Chamber.

Chairman Blackall cited the Arcadia lodging house fire horror, the Triangle fire in New York and the Binghampton fire in connection with his statement that of the forty-one lives lost in fires in Boston last year, he could not find one death due to a fire in a building protected by sprinklers.

Mr. Blackall said Boston's fire insurance loss is one of the greatest of any city in the world, that fully 75 per cent. of Boston's fires are due to non-compliance or non-enforcement of the most ordinary principles of fire prevention and that "90 per cent. of all fires in Boston are unnecessary."

Mr. Blackall stated that last year Boston's fires cost the insurance companies $5,000,000 and that the total loss to business, employes and so on was about $9,000,000. He said the figures may make Boston one of the best cities in the world "from the standpoint of fire protection, instead of the worst."

Urge Public Use of State Armories

The legislative committee on military affairs today heard jointly many bills providing the use of armories for charitable organizations by organizations of boys and by the public generally. Colonel Walter C. Cornhand, in opposition, custodian of armories for twenty years, said the after a policeman's ball in Boston the floor was so cut in a crew of plumbers to repair the damage caused by broken bottles.

THE LUCKY SIXPENCE

DIEDERICHS SCORES DEWEY ON MANILA TALE

Baden Baden, Feb. 25.
To the Editor of the AMERICAN:

The statement which I have prepared for publication in reply to Admiral Dewey's latest account of the incidents in Manila Bay (published in Hearst's Magazine) has been written with great reluctance at the compulsion of a sense of duty.

I take this occasion to ask you to assure the American public that making if anything like a feeling of resentment or animosity or a wish to revive a long past historical controversy is further possible from my thought, but the Dewey account of the Manila episode contains such vitally serious error and reflects so gravely not alone on myself but on the German fleet as a whole and on the officers under me that I have no option in the matter.

A full and final statement reciting the facts as I know them and on the basis of records and proofs in my possession has become imperative.

At various times in recent years erroneous and highly misleading statements, some of them emanating from former officers of Dewey's fleet, have been published in America. Those I have steadily ignored, preferring to believe they are due to misinterpretation or merely to partial knowledge of the situation.

Dewey was in complete command at Manila; in his case the excuse of lack of information does not apply. It is necessarily assumed that he speaks with complete and authentic information. That being the case, justice not only to myself but to the officers under me forbids that I remain longer silent.

I regret the revival of the controversy and confident I hope that my fifteen years of silence will convince the American people how little I am disposed to seek for grounds of dissension with a great and friendly nation.

OTTO VON DIEDERICHS.

SYNOPSIS OF REPLY.

BERLIN, Feb. 25.—A synopsis of von Diederich's reply to Dewey, as given to him to the Boston AMERICAN correspondent, contains the following specific charges:

1—Dewey failed to make a proper declaration of a blockade or properly to define its limits, foreign ships being left in uncertainty in regard to the extent of their freedom of movement.

2—Dewey unwarrantably sought to assume rights of control, or at least of examination, which were beyond his authority even in a blockaded port.

3—Dewey from the outset regarded the movements of the Germans with wholly unjustifiable suspicion, allowing himself to be influenced in this respect by the English civil and naval officials, especially by his friend, Captain Chichester.

4—Dewey, as a result of this suspicious attitude, took unbrage needlessly at fancied slights, and attached entirely false meanings to certain wholly innocent actions of the German fleet, and on one or two occasions adopted an aggressive, high-handed tone and manner which could not fail to arouse resentment on the German side.

ANGELINA MARCOTTE, Lowell girl, who denies tango charges.

Lowell Tango Cop Has 'Nothing to Do'

Tango Censor John H. Clark of the Lowell police department is glad the pre-Lenten dance season is over. Scurrying from hall to hall to see that the dance is decorously executed has kept him too much out in the open air. Now he plans a few quiet evenings at home with a book and a pipe. It will be a hesitation period with Clark.

His next pressing engagement is in the City Court on March 4, when Frank Hennessey and Angelina Marcotte will be given a further hearing following their ejectment from a Lowell hall on the charge they were tangoing improperly. He may illustrate to the Court the various types of tangoing.

Farmer's Treatment of His Wife Lauded

Spirited praise of the New England farmer's treatment of his wife marked an address by Mrs. Edward Pearson Pressey, lecturer and authoress, at a meeting of the Woman Suffrage campaign committee at No. 585 Boylston street today. "The average farmer," she said, "works from daylight to dark and dresses in overalls, while his wife, figuratively speaking, is clothed in purple and fine linen. He remains at home nights in cheap wool or cotton to get the fires while she goes to the city for amusement."

EQUAL BLAME FOR MACKAY AND HIS WIFE

PARIS, Feb. 25.—Both Mackay and his wife are equally blamed in the judgment rendered by the Civil Tribunal in Paris today, in granting a decree to Clarence and Mrs. Clarence Mackay. Mrs. Mackay claimed that her husband cannot her many humiliations. Mr. Mackay entered that Mrs. Mackay lived as she pleased and without any further control than a nominal one.

The judgment contains the following:

"Mrs. Mackay filed a request to separate on January 21, 1913, together with an identical request. The tribunal found both requests justified, therefore, it pronounced a divorce for both, for the faults of both.

"The Tribunal has rejected Mrs. Mackay's demand. Since the marriage, May 12, 1898, the husband always has shown himself of virile character in his relations with his wife. Since 1904 he has subjected his wife to frequent scenes. One day he even left the conjugal domicile and remained away fourteen days and of his return gave no explanation whatever of his absence.

VIOLENT SCENES.

"Since 1911 the scenes have been continuing to get more violent. Mackay would not even eat his meals any more in company with his wife, who ceased to preside at the table to deliver humiliations to her. In New York, after having forced his wife to bring their little daughter Ellen into his presence, he caused an extremely violent scene at her wife's expense.

"In February, 1913, Mrs. Mackay had to submit to a serious operation, and the day after that operation, having entered her bedroom, Mackay made a scene with her before witnesses, which scene he repeated on the following day. That attitude toward his wife, in conjunction with the Mackays' social position, constitutes a legal and grave injury, necessary to the pronouncement of a divorce.

MRS. MACKAY INTOLERANT.

"Mrs. Mackay is represented as having a character of a degree of independence incompatible with respect due to marital authority. She had said, in effect, that she intended always to live after her own fashion, as she pleased, and wished neither control nor comment. She insisted on having free choice of her own relations with persons and would not tolerate nor submit to any outside influence, even that of her husband.

"In December, 1913, Mackay left her conjugal fireside to establish herself in a private apartment let under her own name, at No. 3 Avenue Elisee-Reclus, Paris.

"Despite her husband's efforts to persuade her, she never has consented to abandon her after independence either at Paris or at New York, where the Mackays went on two visits in 1912 and 1913.

"All these facts are sufficient to justify pronouncing a divorce. This divorce, therefore, is pronounced, with the blame on both spouses. The children are given to the father's care."

Jack Johnson Pummels Man at Wife's Call

PARIS, Feb. 25.—Jack Johnson was in a restaurant in the Rue du Faubourg Montmartre, while Mrs. Johnson was in a cab outside. George Carpentier, husband of Jim Johnson, with whom Jack had a bout recently, passed and made a remark which caused the ears of the big pugilist's wife and cousin her to feel that she had been insulted.

She jumped from the cab and rushed into the restaurant to tell her husband. Jack came out with a rush and covered a bar monkey where he found Carpentier and gave an exhibition of what he could do with his fists. Carpentier after a pummelling got over escape in Montrot's. There he was found by Jack, who went home to celebrate the victory, and there was another mixup. This continued until both men were thrown into the street to the huge delight of the onlookers.

An investigation of the telephone company, Secretary Lane said, would make other public service corporations look like sanctuaries. There is every reason to believe, he declared, that certain experts in telephony are regularly retained by the U. S. T. Co. not to do anything for it but not to appear against it."

Speaking of berths minister, and bar, and of Representative Sterling Cockran's proposal to establish a new rule of the lower Democratic caucus, that the candidate lose 10% the equivalent of $1 a week) for each education and be in in France or Germany, Representative John J. Rogers, Democrat, from the military committee recommend entirely to attorneys-at-law or politicians. All members of the bar to submit to an examination in each of the seventeen years.

"I have full right now," said the Mayor of Chinatown, to the Judiciary Committee, "that my friend, the Speaker of the House, made a mistake when he said that this bill ought to be referred this bill of mine to your committee. My preference would have been Committee on Water Supply (laughter), the Committee on Agriculture, or Ghost Dancing. I made up in whole or in part of lawyers rather than attorneys."

"I understand, gentlemen, that I do not mean that, because you are attorneys, you are less noble-minded to my bill. I assume that it will be opposed only by the less learned members of your learned profession. I imagine that any lawyer big enough to be elected to the House of Representatives or the honorable Senate of Massachusetts is big enough to pass these decennial examinations. If he knows the members of the Board of Examiners.

"I note many inequalities in the practice of the law in Boston and Boston. Many attorneys reside at the bar and are seen there quite often. Many never appear at the bar have no practice there at all.

"It has been my observation that attorneys who have all the cases in the world when you meet them in their offices and lovely homes are enough to try a case in order but have to turn it over to someone else. A decennial examination will purge your profession of its dead ones and reduce the cost of living. Give it a trial.

"Thank you for your attention, and any of you votes Cox or Rogers on my bill I reserve the right to proclaim that he is afraid to tackle the proposed examination."

The Bar Examiners appear to have muffed one, indeed. Are they going to let young gentlemen practice law around here who do not know the difference between the lamp and the hesitation?

The promises to be a numerical day on the Hill, for the daily list of Legislative Committee hearings enumerated to less than 150 matters. Right makes a note, if you will please, of what Governor Walsh may do about the initiative and referendum:

The initiative and referendum is more powerful than any anti-lobby legislation. It is destructive of more of the evils that exist in government today than any other reform. It will serve as a great agency in the hands of the people to destroy the power and influence of effective political practices and selfish corporate and privileged interests that interfere, or at least the people believe interfere, with the usefulness and responsiveness of public officials to them.

BETTER THAN CALOMEL

Thousands Have Discovered Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets Are a Harmless Substitute

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets—the substitute for calomel—are a mild but sure laxative, and their effect on the liver is almost instantaneous. They are the result of Dr. Edwards' determination not to treat liver and bowel complaints with calomel. His efforts to target it brought out these little sugar-coated, olive-colored tablets, which do the good that calomel does, but have no bad after-effects. They don't injure the teeth like strong drugs or calomel. They take hold of the trouble and quickly correct it. Why cure a cold—or a headache—with calomel, when you sometimes plain larger with the gums. So do strong liquids. Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are calomel, but let Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets take their place.

Most headaches "dizziness" and that lazy, tired feeling come from constipation and a disordered liver. Take Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets when you feel "blue" and "dreary." Note how they "clear" clouded brain and how they "perk up" the spirits. At 10c and 25c per box. The drug habit in Oregon, Columbus, O. All druggists.

That it is as honest inside as it is beautiful outside, the name Studebaker guarantees.

The fact that it is manufactured to an extent exceeded by no other car of even higher price clinches the question of internal value.

And despite its beauty, despite its internal excellence, despite its seven-passenger capacity, despite its electric starting and lighting system, it is the lowest priced "Six" on the market.

IS YOUR CHILD'S TONGUE COATED?

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, it is a sure sign that your little one's stomach, liver and bowels need a gentle, thorough cleansing at once.

When peevish, cross, listless, pale, doesn't sleep, doesn't eat or act naturally, or is feverish, stomach sour, breath bad; has stomach-ache, sore throat, diarrhoea, full of cold, give a teaspoonful of "California Syrup of Figs," and in a few hours all the foul, constipated waste, undigested food and sour bile gently moves out of its little bowels without griping, and you have a well, playful child again.

You needn't coax sick children to take this luscious "fruit laxative"; they love its delicious taste, and it always makes them feel splendid.

Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly on the bottle. Beware of counterfeits sold here. To be sure you get the genuine, ask to see that it is made "California Fig Syrup Company." Refuse any other kind with contempt.

SECOND GLANCE MAY SOLVE THE CLOCK PUZZLE

One of the first things that every child tries to do, in learning its way around in life, is to tell the time of the day. It learns slowly, stopping to figure the hours and the minutes and finally the correct time. Later this knowledge becomes instinctive, just a glance and the time is known. But just a glance is not enough for the AMERICAN'S clock puzzle. It takes a second glance and another and maybe a scratch or two of the head, to stir up the thoughts. And maybe a bit of real fighting. Try it and see.

"If a calendar clock, which indicates the seconds, minutes, hour and the day of the month shows the correct time at 5 p. m. on Saturday, January 17, and gains 10 minutes daily, what will be the correct time when the clock indicates that it is 5 p. m. on February 17?"

A SCENE FROM "SEPTEMBER MORN."

SEPTEMBER MORN.

CAST OF CHARACTERS.

DENNIS .....Charles Arling
GENEVIEVE .....Caroline Rankin
ALI, the tattoo man....Joseph Harris

HE bumped into me on the lower verge of the Bowery — just about where the news-making district merges into the news-writing district of Park Row. He was making a starboard tack over to Ida on Nathan Square, and I had the right of way. When I fell under his starwart thump, I was naturally indignant. He stood above me and looked down on me out of ragged dignity, the ribbon on his sailor's cap fluttering foolishly in the breeze.

Abruptly he stooped and I noted that Hercules might have swirled striped mine and pulled me up.

"I was just saved from killing yo," he said. "It ain't you, though. Because you ain't gone back to writin' for them there newspapers, that calls a sailor man a 'Jackie.' Or have ye?"

"Denis," I said, "I have," while he put the typewriting fingers of my right hand out of the unnerves a week. "But don't rebuke me. I met Mike Mario last night and I know all."

"Ye know I'm married, sir," he sighed. "Mary, my wife, she took lucky I am. I got, sir, the most commandin' woman that ever navigated a craft of her years."

"You needed a pilot," I said. "What are those lights over there?"

"I will take just one," he consented.

Comfortably enconced behind a table we got down to facts.

"When did love dawn, Denis?" I asked.

"September Morn," he said gravely. "Ye see, that night ye took me off the 'Maria' and put me in the navy—may yer soul rest in the pit—I was bound to win the hope of a misapent life. Genevieve an' me had went to school together in the backyard of Ireland. Genevieve got the idea of bein' a suffragette in Piccadilly. She always got the pip of life out a' alarmin' people, Genevieve did. She do still.

"Well, sir, I went into that there American Navy, an' I was Bluiter.

"Why?"

"Because o' physical deficiency. I wasn't up to the artistic heights o' form that adjoined them other gentlemen gettin' the same pay. I wasn't properly decorated they says to me.

"Trust me, I've seen the metropolitan museum and the family albums o' half the families in Calcarry, but I never seen such illustrations as they was on the front an' back o' them sailors."

"What do you mean, Denny?"

"I mean tattoos."

"I was treated brutal for lacking similar pictures. So I went an' got 'em.

"I wanted to get somethin' that would please Genevieve, too, as well as them high an' mighty critics on ship.

"They were an artist named Ali—an' he looked the name—as we was blowin' up here on the last trip. He had a face like a dull axe an' he wops a rag around it that he said was a turban. I think it was the piece of my sister Katie's skirt that the old woman used to use for a dust rag—but no matter. He tattooed me a picture on me buxom bosom that would of made that there Mike Angelo sick.

"What was it?" It was the latest piece o' art de luxe in the market. It was named 'September Morn,' but it looked later.

"This sea goin' porcupine called Ali, he probably tore the under side o' me heart out doin' it—but he done it beautiful.

"I didn't die but twice durin' the pleasant party. D'ye ever have sometody see a picture into your hide? Charmin' is the word—if you say it with five cusses and a swear.

"I'll show ye what can be done though, by them ink an' needle artists when they want to do things right an' know how to do it. Ain't little somethin' to silence the foghorter on a stormy night? I'll say so.

I gazed.

"But that isn't 'September Morn,' Dennis," I said. "You've been swindled." The portrait of a lady that adorned the breast of the brave sailor that I ever met (or ever hope to) was a willowly creature in a black skirt and a waist that troubled her chin in its exaggerated modesty. There was a red trimming around the skirt and her hair was red, but if there was any suggestion of the celebrated 'September Morn' which Anthony Comstock barred, you could have knocked it silly with an X-ray.

"It WAS 'September Morn,'" said Dennis sneekly. "But the sun came out an' Genevieve saw it, an' that was good-night. The day growed, y'see.

"I was mighty proud o' that breast o' chicken, sir, but ye can't tell about Genevieve. Y'see, when the ship come in, I wanted to show her me moral decorations, an' all suited 'em.

"But gimme a woman, sir, to look for appreciation of what's in me.

"'Them ain't moral decorations,' them's the most immoral I ever seen in me life. You take 'em off quick or don't let no shadow o' yours thicken this door again,' she says to me.

"'But it's burnt in,' I says. 'It won't come out.'

"'Go,' she says to me.

"I goed.

"'But I see Genevieve goin' out the sock way an' I follyed in a fit o' grin like I ain't had since me pet four-leaf shamrock died in Calvary.

"I see her stop at a picture store winey an' look in. I see her go in. I looks at the windy, too, an'—there, big as life, is Miss Regina Morris, shiverin', on East Fourth street, without nothin' on but her good looks."

Dennis paused. He took his drink very slowly, soberly. I seemed to have finished his story. I protested as delicately as possible.

"Didn't Miss Genevieve buy one of the picture store?" I asked.

"She did," said Dennis. He paused again.

"Why?"

"Why! There wasn't no why. Genevieve had gone in an' she bein' the head of the Purity League, she says to the picture man: 'You take that there picture o' September Morn out o' that windy,' she says.

"'I will not,' he says.

"So she takes the picture an' knocks it into the look o' what it might 'a been if I hadn't hit the skipper o' the Maria first the time he took it' the axe—y'remember the parley, sir.

"Well, Ion standin' outside lookin' in because I have saw Genevieve on my way back from Ali's where I had the lady dressed.

"The lady? The lady—what? WHAT lady, what?" I asked.

"September Morn," said Dennis gravely. "What else could I do? She was with me for good, wasn't she? Te couldn't take nothin' on; ye had to put somethin' on. Ali knew how—for two dollars an' seventy-five cents—how all I showed.

"But as I was sayin' when you rudely interrupted me, sir, the first thing I see, passin' the picture store windy, is Genevieve comin' out. She come out faster 'n I thought any woman could come out of battle. He'd turned the picture on her."

"The what?"

"The nose he used for holystoning the deck o' the picture store. Genevieve come out wetter'n September Morn ever dared to get.

"Well, when I'd killed the picture store man—an' I seen he took her home an' I showed me new moral decorations.

"'You brute,' she says, 'you tricin', evil-souled brute.'

"'What's the matter?' I says.

"'If you know enough to say moral decorations instead o' moral decorations,' she says, 'you might know enough not to come to me—the president of the Purity League—she says, with a girl in a suit skirt on her chest permanently she says. 'Come right with me, sir.'

"Another sin, sir! I gotta get home. The time is shorter 'n sand to me.

"What do you mean, Dennis?"

"Well, I'm married now, sir."

"But you just said you had guaranteed."

"For the love o' Pat, if Ali could put a slit skirt on September Morn, he could put a long skirt on her, couldn't he? There she is."

He barred his decorated breast.

I turned away.

We HAD to have another.

THE AMERICAN TOBACCO COMPANY

BECKER PLANS TO FIGHT FOR POLICE JOB

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—So confident is Charles Becker, former police lieutenant, once convicted of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, that he will go free, that he plans to get himself reinstated on the police force. He will also demand his back pay.

Following the promise of a new trial, District Attorney Charles S. Whitman as much as says that Becker shall not die in the chair.

When Mrs. Becker was in a taxicab on the public schools received the news of the reversal of her husband's conviction, she saw Joseph A. Shay, her husband's attorney. She threw her arms around Shay's neck and, free, then there is little doubt that kissed him.

If Charles Becker eventually goes he will seek reinstatement on the police force, and will go to court to force that action.

In conversation in Sing Sing prison today, the former lieutenant said he had thought of proceedings that might be instituted to recover his back salary.

He was discharged from the police force solely on the basis of his alleged connection with the graft proceedings following the Rosenthal murder.

If he is found innocent, or is not further prosecuted, lawyers think that his chances for recovery of back salary and for reinstatement will be more than good.

BIBLE HIS CONSOLATION.

During his imprisonment his favorite book has been the Bible, and today he told Father Cashin, the Catholic chaplain, that he felt he had won his renewed chance for life by months of prayer.

"The decision of the court was no surprise to me," said Becker today. "I thought it would be favorable and that is what has buoyed me up during these months of what many people call a living death."

The prisoner looked his interviewer calmly in the eyes as he spoke of the four gun men who were doomed to death by the decision of the same court that gave the ex-Lieutenant a second trial.

"I know little about them," he said. "I have seen them every day, but we never did talk much. I never knew them until the trial and I don't think I ever met any one of them before the trouble occurred."

Becker's eyes filled with tears as he reverted to the aid that his wife had given him from the time that he was first accused.

"I have been reading the Good Book," he said. "Put even there could find no one who equalled Mrs. Becker in courage. Isn't she a wonder?

"She is the grandest, bravest little woman that ever stepped God's earth. She only cried once and that was in the Tombs after my conviction.

ASKS NO SYMPATHY.

"I hope the public will bear with me until I prove I am innocent; more sinned against than sinning. I ask no sympathy, no quarter; only justice. I believe that the successful outcome of my appeal is due largely to efforts of my loyal wife, the best woman that ever lived. God bless her and to my counsel."

BECKER'S APPEAL

Asks Only Justice

PRAISE FOR WIFE

Charles Becker in his appeal to the public said:

"I hope the public will bear with me until I prove I am an innocent man, more sinned against than sinning.

"I ask no sympathy and no quarter, only justice.

"I believe that the successful outcome of my appeal is due largely to the efforts of my loyal wife, the best woman that ever lived. God bless her, and to my counsel in the case."

Becker displayed exceptional bitterness when the name of Rosenthal was mentioned. He clenched his fist and his voice was hard.

"Scheppy was a perjurer of the worst type," he exclaimed. "He never came to see me at my house. I don't know who put the words in his mouth. He never did any of the things he said. I could have walked the streets a free man if I had been willing to make a false confession, but I wouldn't. I knew I was innocent and I made up my mind I would rather go to the block as a martyr than go free under a stain like that."

"TRIAL WAS UNFAIR."

Attorney McIntyre, Becker's counsel, said today: "As I understand the decision of the Court of Appeals, the reversal is based on the ground that the trial generally was unfair and that the trial court exacted of counsel for the defendant diligent efforts, namely, committing him to stand on his feet from sixteen to eighteen hours a day and to do this with the greatest responsibility known to law in the defense of a human life.

"In due time I hope to have Becker a free man.

"The district attorney is the last man in the world," said Whitman today, "who should want a conviction to stand which is not justifiable by law. That is all the comment that care to make."

JACK ROSE SAYS HE IS READY TO WAIVE IMMUNITY

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—At Port Jervis, where he was lecturing, Jack Rose made this statement:

"I must do my duty in this case. My duty is on the side of God. My heart is on the side of truth. My duty, to the law and to District Attorney Whitman compels me to remain on the side of the law. I will testify in a new trial, if Becker has to be, to the truth and only to the truth.

"I have nothing to add or detract from what I swore to before. I would like Becker to get a new trial and if it can be proven there was no frame-up. If it can be proven that there was, I want to take the cell that is now Becker's.

"I want also then to pay the penalty and waive immunity."

DANCER SUES FOR MILLBURY PAGEANT BILL

Miss Virginia Tanner, Radcliffe College '08, exponent of aesthetic dancing and pageantry, and noted, despite her youth, as a soloist, has filed suit in Suffolk superior court against the Millbury District Nursing Association for $1,000, which Miss Tanner says, is still due her from the Greek Pageant of the Odyssey, which she produced last Summer in that town.

One of the most interesting bits on the itemized bill of expense submitted by Miss Tanner is the following:

"Eight bottles of grape juice used in Scene IV, at ten cents, eighty cents."

PEAGONS OF "WINE."

The society people of Millbury and surrounding towns who attended this pageant noted curiously in Scene IV, how flagons of "wine" were consumed by the hardy heroes who accompanied Ulysses in his classic travels.

Miss Tanner's bill is expense record indeed, but this "wine" was modern grape juice, the drink that made Mr. Bryan famous.

NO ORDINARY DANCER.

Miss Tanner is no ordinary dancer, for she holds the degrees of A. B. and A. M. from Radcliffe. In college she was esteemed as a rare combination of a girl who could get plenty of fun out of life and a hard study like sixty at the same time. Since her graduation she has danced in public and private, has composed dances and staged pageants. She invents her own steps and arranges her own productions.

The big society function of Millbury last Summer was the three-day "Pageant of the Odyssey," given under auspices of the Millbury District Nursing Association, of which Mrs. Lurline W. Hooper was president.

Several hundred of the best looking men and prettiest girls the town could produce took part. The pageant held the entire attention of the community and Millbury learned more about Greek costumes and classic ways about Ulysses and his adventurous wanderings than it had known since its high school days.

DELAYED BY RAIN.

The pageant was scheduled to run three days the latter part of last May. But, on the second day the rain was so torrential that the performance which was to have been held that day took place early in June.

Miss Tanner claims in her suit that the Millbury District Nursing has not reimbursed her the money paid out or paid her for services. She says a contract was entered into between her and the society under which she was to receive $100, outright, all expenses and all the orders for profits. She says she carried out her part of the contract, but that the society has failed to do so and that she has a claim of $1,000.

Peculiar After Effects of Grip This Year

Leaves Kidneys in Weakened Condition

Doctors in all parts of the country have been kept busy with the epidemic of grip which has visited so many homes. The symptoms of grip this year are often very distressing and leave the system in a run down condition, particularly the kidneys, which seem to suffer most, as almost every victim complains of lame back and urinary troubles which should not be neglected, as these danger signals often lead to dangerous kidney troubles. Druggists report a large call for Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root which so many people say soon heals and strengthens the kidneys after an attack of grip. Swamp-Root is a great kidney, liver and bladder remedy and being an herbal compound, has a gentle healing effect on the kidneys, which is almost immediately noticed in most cases by those who try it. Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., offer to send a sample size bottle of Swamp-Root, on receipt of ten cents, to every sufferer who requests it. A trial will convince any one who may be in need of it. Regular size bottles 50 cts. and $1.00. For sale at all druggists. Be sure to mention this paper.

Miss ELEANOR WILSON, Percy Mackaye on the left, and Joseph Linn Smith, portraying the revival of the bird spirit, in the "Bird Masque" at New York.

WILSON GIRLS IN BIRD MASQUE AT NEW YORK

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—In the presence of a large and fashionable audience, and under most distinguished patronage, headed by Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the President of the United States, Percy Mackaye's "Bird Masque" was given in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor.

The Masque was written for the dedication of the Bird Sanctuary of the Northern Bird Club, last Summer. More than ordinary interest attached to the performance, which was literally by the Wilson girls and not Stamford, because of the appearance of Miss Eleanor Wilson, as Genie, the Bird Spirit, and the reader of incidental songs by Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson.

This was the first time that a New York audience had enjoyed a spectacle in which two daughters of a President took prominent parts.

Mrs. Wilson, their mother, was unable to be present.

The chief role of the Masque was taken by the author, Percy Mackaye, poet and playwright. The scene was a glade in the bird sanctuary. The performance opened with a prelude sung by Miss Margaret Woodrow Wilson. She represented a little girl wandering in the quiet of the woodland and hearing the voice of the herald thrush. It was a meditation and composed by Frederick A. Converse. The words are simple and portray the emotion which a child would have when she heard the bird song "so wild and wonderful."

Passing on deeper in the wood, the little girl thinks drearily of all wild things and the wrongs done to them by their human brothers and sisters. Out of her reverie grows the Masque which follows:

Overdue Liners Make Port Today

The White Star liner Arabic, two days overdue, and the Leyland liner Winifredian, three days late, docked today in Boston. Both encountered terrific weather, and the Winifredian lost a lifeboat. Among the Arabic's passengers was Cheng Weng, a Chinese who is to study at Harvard. The Arabic brought 78 cabin and 190 steerage and the Winifredian 28 passengers.

Injured Man Saved by Vassar Girls

Starvation Will Not Cure Dyspepsia

But a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet Will Enable You to Eat Your Meals Without Suffering After Doing So.

Every person knows that to live in a healthy, happy manner we must eat. Distressing, prolonged fasting, etc., are not the correct methods of eliminating digestive disorders.

Many dyspeptics know that they must eat and so they go to their meals in a half-hearted manner. When they are food before them they are under miserable. Their judgments tell them to eat, but their stomachs revolt at the idea and so what ever food they consume does them more harm than good.

"If I Were Sure This Meal Would Not Injure Me I Would Eat, for I Am Losing Weight Every Day."

In cases of dyspepsia, catarrh of the stomach, gastritis, heartburn, gas, foul breath, bowel complaint, stomach trouble etc., a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet taken after each meal will do more good than anything you have ever tried.

You simply cannot realize how these little digesters put away a meal, without effort, pain or distress, and at the same time so build up the digestive apparatus as to make the next meal more easily taken care of.

To understand what Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are composed of is to realize that when they reach the stomach they dissolve into digestive juices just as directed by Nature. They hold ingredients which the healthy stomach is supplied with and the unhealthy stomach lacks.

These natural qualities have a great digestive influence upon all food. One grain of one ingredient contained in Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets is sufficient to digest 3000 grains of food.

When you have given this a single thought consideration you will then understand why it is that Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are the greatest stomach and dyspepsia remedy known today.

Thousands of stomach sufferers all over this country, who have been relieved of all kinds of digestive diseases are the influences which have made these tablets sold by druggists in every city, town and village in this country.

Go to your druggist today and obtain a box. Price, 50 cents.

BOY SLAYERS IN COURT, HELD FOR HEARING

On the strength of their alleged confession that they killed Ismael Emerley-Dublie at Watertown to cause his death in the Christian religion, Nishan M. Aprahian, sisters, and Mazoog Garabedian, 17, were remanded for a hearing when arraigned in Waltham District Court today.

Sabia Arshagoan and Hapit Kajayian, arrested on a charge of slaying the Turk, and Melkia Hadjbarkian and Hagop Doostonian, charged with being accessories, were discharged.

Assistant District Attorney Frank C. O'Donnell moved for the discharge of the four men and after requested Judge Lucie to continue the case against the two boys for one week. This motion was vigorously opposed by Attorney James M. Graham, who held that the boys were entitled to a lower court hearing to say as the Grand Jury would be open to the Grand Jury would be open to another week and might indict the boys in the meantime.

The court room was jammed with Armenians, but no demonstration was made.

ECZEMA SO BAD HAD TO LEAVE WORK

Began by Pimples and Blackheads. Hands, Face and Neck Affected. Could Not Put Hands in Water. CuticuraSoapandCintmentCured.

46 No. Main St., Pascoag, R. I.—"I had eczema which I could not get rid of. It began by pimples and blackheads and then began to itch so I began to scratch and kept on scratching until it formed in scales and they came to a head. The parts that were affected were my hands face and on my neck. I was ashamed with them. I had to leave my office work for a week and a half. The eczema caused much disfigurement and I could not put my hands into water at all. I could not wash my hands for two weeks. It also caused loss of sleep.

"I got some ointments and used one box and it didn't seem to do any good so I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment for three weeks and then I was cured." (Signed) Miss Beatrice Desaulnier Sept. 19, 1913.

The regular use of Cuticura Soap for toilet and bath not only tends to preserve, purify and beautify the skin, scalp hair and hands, but assists in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores, the common cause of pimples, blackheads, redness and roughness, yellow, oily, mother and other unwholesome conditions of the skin. Cuticura Soap (25c.) and Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are sold everywhere. A single set is often sufficient. Sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Becker Finds Comfort as Student of Bible

A reporter of Charles Becker's acquaintance sent to him Hannah Warden Claney of Sing Sing, a request that he make some statement of how he felt about receiving the good news that he was to have another trial.

Becker sent from his cell in the death-house a slip of paper on which were written quotations from the Bible. "Tell him—and tell the other boys—to read those verses of the Bible," he said. "They express my sentiments."

Below are printed some of the quotations the fifty-first chapter of Ecclesiasticus, which Becker apparently thought were particularly applicable to his circumstances:

2. I will give praise to Thy name, for Thou hast been a helper and protector to me.

3. And has preserved my body from destruction, from the snare of an unjust tongue and from the lips of them that forge lies, and in the sight of them that stood by, Thou hast been my helper.

4. And Thou hast delivered me, according to the multitude of the mercy of Thy name, from them that were prepared to devour.

5. From the oppression of the flame which surrounded me, and in the midst of the fire I was not burnt.

7. From the depth of the belly of hell, and from an unclean tongue, and from lying words, from an unjust king, and from a slanderous tongue.

9. And my life was drawing near to hell beneath.

10. They compassed me on every side, and there was no one that would help me. I looked for the succor of men, and there was none.

14. I called upon the Lord, the Father of my Lord, that he would not leave me in the day of my trouble, and in the time of the proud without help.

16. And Thou hast saved me from destruction and hast delivered me from the evil time.

17. Therefore I will give thanks, and praise Thee, and bless the name of the Lord.

Becker is said to have become a sincere student of the Scriptures and likewise a devout believer in what he has read.

President Is Forced to Identify Himself

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—President Wilson on his way back after a walk through the streets determined to take a short cut through the long corridor of the Interior Department. At the entrance he was confronted with a sign, "No visitors admitted after 3 p. m."

When the President opened the door an aged doorkeeper stepped forward and asked:

"Well, what do you want?"

"I'm Woodrow Wilson," answered the President with a smile.

"Well, well," said the doorkeeper nervously. "I thought your face looked familiar."

ANÆMIA IS BLOOD POVERTY

cheeks and lips become pale, the body is languid and colds are easily contracted—it undermines the very source of health and must have immediate treatment.

Drugs or alcoholic mixtures cannot make blood. Nourishment is necessary and Scott's Emulsion is always the physician's favorite—its concentrated medical nourishment charges the blood with red corpuscles, feeds the famished tissues and carries food value to every tiny nerve and fibre in a natural, easy way.

Take Scott's Emulsion to enrich your blood but shun the alcoholic substitutes.

Hot Tea Breaks A Cold—Try This

Get a small package of Hamburg Breast Tea, or as the German folks call it, "Hamburger Brust Thee," at any pharmacy. Take a tablespoonful of the tea, put a cup of boiling water upon it, pour through a sieve and drink a teacupful at any time. It is the most effective way to break a cold and cure grip, as it opens the pores, relieving congestion. Also loosens the bowels, thus breaking a cold at once.

It is inexpensive and entirely vegetable, therefore harmless.

Stories about Stage Folk

Sparklets from "The Doll Girl."

There are lots of funny things in the Carle-Williams show at the Colonial. Here are a few of them:

MARQUIS—Introducing the strolling actor, Romeo Talmi: This is Signor Talmi, the man with the limousine body.

* * *

TALMI—I play all of the principal parts. I also paint the scenery. What do you think of my blue drawing room?

Marquis—I thought your room better than your company.

* * *

YVETTE—You are too old and baldheaded.

Marquis—I am not baldheaded. I have a tall face.

* * *

ROSA—A married man's club should be in his own home.

Marquis—Most married men need a club in their own home.

Caplet's Locks.

One afternoon Andrea Caplet, the opera conductor, who affects the flowing locks fad, was walking along the street when he was accosted by a small bootblack whose face looked as if he had been crawling through a ton of coal.

"No, boy. I don't want a shine, answered the musician, as his alfalfa gloriously blew in the soft breeze, "but I'll give you a quarter if you will wash your face."

"I'm game, all right," was the ready response of the kid.

With this the youngster hustled for an adjacent fountain, where he vigorously scrubbed his face and dried it on the sleeve of his jacket.

"Here's your quarter, boy," smiled the musician, digging into his pocket as the kid came back. "You have earned every cent of it."

"I don't want it," scornfully rejoined the boy, starting down the street. "Keep it an' git yer hair cut."

Hitchcock Elucidates.

Anybody who is still a bit foggy about the income tax should hear Raymond Hitchcock explain it at the Tremont Theatre. Hitchcock comes before the curtain to discuss the situation. He defines the tax thusly:

"The income tax was passed by the Democrats to annoy the Republicans. You have to have $3000 a year to attract any attention. Below three thousand you are all right, but above three thousand you are suspicious. The Democrats are all safe, but the Republicans are going to get into a lot of trouble. You understand that $3000 spoiles to single men, but if you are married they let you have another thousand as a compensation. They don't give it to you, you understand, but if you have it, they let you keep it and pay no tax.

"Provided that your wife shall not also have $4000 a year, in which case exemption does not follow. Again, if you have a child there is a further rebate of $1.50. For each additional child there is a further reduction, until if you have nineteen children the government owes you money."

Here Mr. Hitchcock got so wild the reporter couldn't follow him and when next he caught the trend Hitchcock seemed to be running for President of the United States on some ticket that had Roosevelt down as Vice-President."

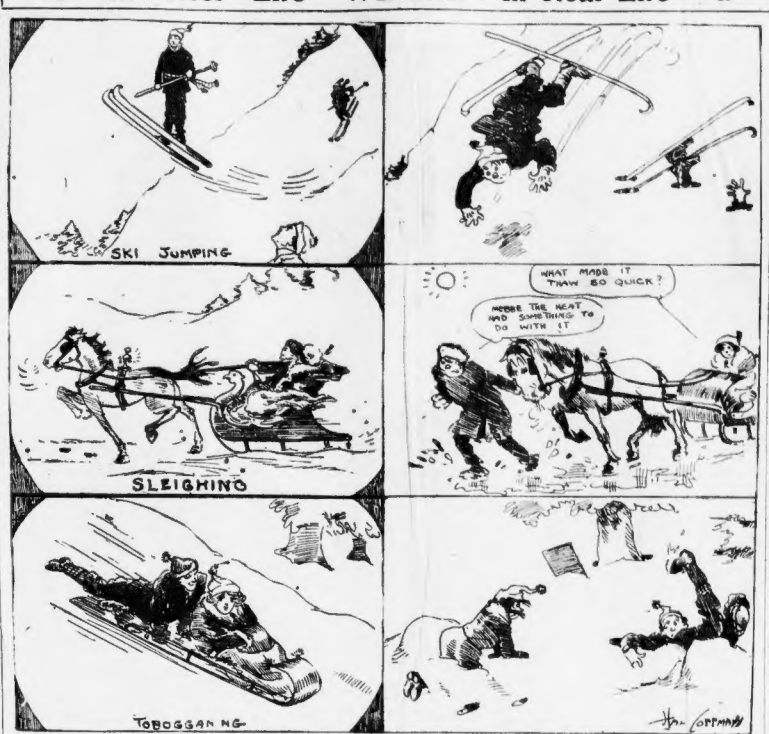
Surprised the Native.

Annie Russell, now touring in a repertoire of the old comedies, has a Summer home at Pemaquid Harbor, Me. There she is always warmly welcomed by the all-the-year residents of that quaint northeastern village. Her naive personality, her gentle manner, and low, beautifully modulated voice have endeared her to the natives.

She has spent several Summers among the natives before a rude accident revealed her as an actress. To the folk of the north, the truth, though vouched for by her, seemed incredible.

"Gosh," said one skeptic, a straw between his teeth, quivering in his whirlwind of excitement, "kin ye make 'em hear ye?"

In "Reel" Life—WINTER—In Real Life



Chatter You Hear in Hotel Lobbies

Oh, My! Boston's Not So Slow.

TOM PRICE of Chicago was dining with some Boston friends at the Georgian the other night and like most Chicagoans, was talking about his town, how big it is, how enterprising, how it leads in everything.

Al Sheehan, the theatrical manager, who is a Bostonian through and through, remarked:

"If Chicago is such a big town it's strange you don't get a subway out there."

"Well, we're going to have one. There's a movement on foot to build one now."

"Huh," remarked Sheehan. "Boston had to build a subway back in 1897. Chicago is an enterprising town is it not? It is not."

Tom Price was silent for several minutes and then changed the subject violently.

The second subway was built in Boston, and the work was finished in the nineties.

London had previously built underground railways, but didn't electrify them until about 1905.

At present London, Paris, Berlin, Vienna and Buda Pest, Boston and New York have subways.

Chicago, Buenos Ayres, St. Petersburg, Leeds and Scawthgan have no subways.

The first tunnel under a river was built beneath the Thames in London, for the underground railway.

The second was built under Boston Harbor to East Boston.

New York's river subways were not built until the East Boston Tunnel had been operating for nearly ten years.

Back to Curate.

"PRECEDENCE, so far as it goes, is a very fine thing," said Frederick Townsend Martin, author of "Things I Remember," at a dinner in New York. "The English, though carry precedence perhaps too far.

"A bishop entertained a number of clergy at his Episcopal see. His guest of honor was another bishop. This gentleman, at breakfast one morning, said to the butler.

"'Why, this is a bad egg. Pkew! Fah! What an atrocious odor! Really, my man, I'm surprised.'

"The butler, with a serious face, examined the egg closely. Then he said, frowning and shaking his head:

"'I beg your pardon, my lord. A most regrettable thing has happened. The stupid servant has given your lordship, in mistake, a curate's egg.'"

Crowning Insult.

Sometimes one can hurt another's feelings worse by a slight action than by any number of words. There is an example of this in the young married woman who went home to her mother and sobbingly declared she just couldn't be happy with her husband again.

"I wouldn't have minded it so much, mother," she sobbed, "if Charlie had answered me back when I scolded him, bu—bu—but he did something worse!"

Her mother was duly shocked at this.

"Mercy, my dear child!" she exclaimed. "He struck you, then?"

"No, worse than that, mother!" and the young wife sobbed afresh.

"Tell me at once!" indignantly demanded her mother.

"He—he just yawned."

With the Tide.

Charlie Brickley of the Harvard varsity said in a talk feat the other day that he only knows of one game played under worse conditions than last season. He said:

"It had been raining steadily for the past twenty-four hours, and in consequence the field was more like a lake than a football ground. But the sun was shining now, and a big crowd had assembled to see the game. At the referee decided that the match could not be postponed.

"What!" cried the captain of the visiting team, 'surely you're not going to make us play under these conditions?'

"'Certainly,' replied the knight of the whistle. 'Then, seeing an angry retort forming on the captain's lips, he added:

"'Now, don't bang about. You've won the toss. Which side are you taking?'

"'Well, if we must play,' came the answer, 'I guess we'll kick off with the tide.'"

Some Eater.

Eating contests are still classed by many as good sporting events, and a man who can get and drink more at one sitting than any one else is hailed as a champion, and regarded in some circles with the same reverence as an unbeaten prizefighter.

Chester W. Glidden of Lawrence is one talent claimant for the gastronomical heavyweight title, and he has issued a challenge that he will eat more in three hours than any two men together. Some of Glidden's past meals are:

Forty pounds of watermelon in one hour.

Seventy-eight pancakes in fifty-seven minutes.

Six boiled dinners at one meal.

For P. M. Duty.

Senator Ollie James told of a young man in Louisville who, not long since, hung his sign out of his office door at law.

One afternoon a friend, upon entering the office, observed upon the desk of the new legal light a dozen alarm clocks.

"That's a good idea," said the friend. "One is very apt to oversleep these fine spring mornings."

The youthful attorney smiled sadly.

"This alarm clock was not bought for the reason you suppose," said he. "I merely keep it here to make me think it is time to get home."

"I SHALL say nothing about—about—what—has—what has happened in the regrettable past," said Ethel in a tone that said everything. "That must be left to you and your conscience—but, I do feel, and I feel it very strongly, that I must have everything to say about what is going to happen to you in the future."

"The future?" questioned Betty as wearily as if in her gray twilight there could be no future—of night or day.

"I really think it would be easier for both of us if we were alone."

Betty put out her hand to Sir Egbert. "No, no, Eggy understands. He's my friend—you ARE my friend even now—aren't you, Eggy?"

"Yes."

"You seem to insinuate that I'm not your friend," said Ethel. "If you think that you're wrong—but I could make light of what you have done—if I could palliate or find excuses for the degradation you have brought upon your womanly dignity and honor. The betrayal of your sacred motherhood—Betty—what would your boys think of you—if they knew?"

"If they knew?" It was never going to know or suspect that—their mother was not what the world calls a good woman. It was the ghost that has been haunting Betty all through the days when she had met by Jack's bedside and tried to make sunshine.

"Enough of that," said Ethel, the grim keeper of consciences. "I said we would leave the past alone. It's the future I'm looking to—you had a letter from Cecil this morning. . . . I see it on the table before it was taken to your room. . . . May I ask, has he any suggestions to make regarding the future?"

Betty bowed her shamed head a little—she was too greatly moved to speak.

"Ah—evidently he has . . . May one hear it?"

Betty took a letter from her handbag and handed it to her sister. "Will you read it?" she said.

Ethel read it in silence. Then she folded it methodically and placed it on the table beside her.

"I am glad he realized where his duty lies . . . You still wish Sir Egbert to be present while we discuss this miserable business?"

"Yes," said Betty slowly.

"Very well, then he writes that if Betty will not come out by the next boat and marry him out there, he will return at once and she must marry him here . . . It seems a pity he didn't think of that before he sailed, instead of taking that long voyage to give his brains time to settle down."

Ethel considered the matter dispassionately for a moment. For Betty the thing would be dispassionately considered—it was life and a life sentence to her. It meant being chained forever to the memory of her unthinkable madness. It meant she could never forget. Even when there was no horrible stress or necessity to chain her to Cecil, Betty had felt that a marriage would be the forerunner of unhappiness for her. The day must come when he would feel that long gap of eighteen years between them, and it would come the sooner if marriage were a necessity of decency instead of the imperative call of love. If ever marriage between her and Cecil had been impossible, it was doubly impossible now that she was caught and enmeshed by her own deeds so that marriage was about to be foisted upon her.

"Which shall it be? Shall he return or will you go to Canada? That much you may choose," said Ethel.

"I can't—I can't," moaned Betty with a sob that shook in her voice.

"It must be one or the other," said the oracle—oracle only because she happened to have the upper hand through her possession of that prime necessity—money.

Eggy thought grimly of how ghastly a farce it was that Betty must be guided by one whom nature could understand no need of hers except that need for maintenance—for money.

"I can't marry him now. Oh, don't you see I can't?" cried Betty, powerless to explain why she could not marry—rather die."

"You can't have marrying him now . . . It's the only course. Poor as it is, you should kneel down and thank your God—that he still retains some sense of decency—that he is still willing to marry after—I anticipated considerable trouble—considerable obstacle in the matter, in view of the difference in your ages and your two children. I don't know many men would have written as he has written—after all Betty you were fortunate—in that the man is so quixotically a gentleman."

"You've GOT to do it. The matter has passed out of the realm of sentimental whims and fancies—you've thought only of yourself long enough: you've got your boys' future to consider now. Who's going to pay for their education? Cecil hasn't got much, I know. So I shall continue to allow you fifteen hundred pounds a year after your marriage—but if you don't marry Cecil—you will have only what your husband left you—I don't fancy the boys will get much of a start in the world on that."

The Woman Thou Gavest Me

HALL CAINE'S GREATEST STORY

THE NARRATIVE OF MARY O'NEILL
FOURTH PART
I FALL IN LOVE

Copyright, 1912, by Hearst's Magazine. Copyright, 1913, by Hearst's Magazine. Copyright in Great Britain. Copyright, 1913, by J. B. Lippincott Company.

And then I told him the story of my struggle—how love had been no happiness to me but only a cruel warfare, how I had suffered and prayed and gone to mass and confession, yet all to no purpose, for my affection for Martin was like a blazing fire which nothing could put out.

Father Dan's hands and lips were trembling while I spoke and I could see that he was shuddering with pity for me, so I went on to say that if God had put this pure and holy love into my heart could it be wrong—

"Stop a minute," cried Father Dan. "Who says God put it there? And who informed you it was pure and holy? Let us see where we are. Come, now. You say the Bishop told you that you could never be divorced under any circumstances?"

"Yes."

"Yet you wish to leave your husband?"

"How can I help it? The life I have been living is too horrible."

"Never mind that now. You wish to leave your husband, don't you?"

"I . . . I must."

"And you want to go to this . . . this young . . . in short, you want to go to Martin Conrad? That's the plain truth, isn't it? Don't deny it.

"Very well, let us call things by their proper names. What is the fact? You are asking me—me, your spiritual Father—to allow you to live a life of open adultery. That's what it comes to. You know it is, and God and His holy Mother have mercy on your soul!"

I was so startled and shocked by his fierce assault, and by the cruel thrust it had come in, that I flung up my hands to my face and kept them there, for I felt as if my brain had been stunned and my heart was bursting.

How long I sat like this, with my hidden face to the fire, I do not know, but after a long silence in which I heard nothing but my own heaving breath, I became aware that Father Dan had thrown one of my hands down to his knee and was smoothing it with his own.

"Now, be angry with your old priest for telling you the truth," he said. "It's hard to bear, I know it's hard; but it's as hard for him as for you, my child. Think—only think what he is trying to save you from. If you do what you wish to do, you will put yourself out of communion. If you put yourself out of communion you will cease to be a Catholic. What will become of you then, my daughter? What will be left to replace the consolations of the Church—in sorrow, in suffering, in the hour of death? Have you never thought of that?"

I never had. It was thrilling through and through me.

"You say you cannot live any longer with your husband because he has broken the vow he made to you at your marriage. But think how many thousands of poor women all over the world are doing it every day—living with adulterous husbands for the sake of their homes and children, and not only for the sake of their homes and children only but for the sake of their souls and their religion. Blessed, blessed martyrs, though we know nothing about them, holding society and the Church and the human family together!

I was trembling all over. I felt as if Father Dan were trying to take away from me the only sweet and precious thing in my life that was left.

"Then you think you cannot live without the one you love, because all your heart is full of him. But think of the holy women, the holy saints, who have gone through the same temptation—fighting against it with all the strength of their souls until the very wounds of our blessed Lord have been marked on their bodies."

ONLY REFUGE.

He was creeping closer to my side. His voice was quivering at my ear. I was struggling hard, and still trembling all over.

"Hold fast by the Church, my child. It is your only refuge. Remember that God made your marriage and you cannot break it without breaking your faith. Can anything be dearer that is bought at such a price? Nothing in this world! When you meet tomorrow night—you two must—tell him that. Tell him I told you to say so. I have you both. Don't break your old priest's heart. He's in trouble enough for you already. Don't let him think that he must lose you altogether. And then remember, your mother, too—that saint in heaven who suffered so long and was patient. Everything will depend upon you, my child, in matters of this kind the woman is the stronger vessel. Be strong for him and for yourself. Renounce your guilty love, my daughter—"

"But I cannot, I cannot," I said. "I love him, and I cannot give him up."

"Let us ask God to help you," said Father Dan, and still holding my hand he drew me down to my knees and knelt beside me. The room was dark by this time, and only the ashes of the fire threw a red glow on our faces.

Then in a low voice, so low that it was like his throbbing whisper before the altar, when he raised the sacred Host, Father Dan prayed for me (calling me his dear child whom God had committed to his care) that I might keep my marriage vow and be saved from the temptation to break it.

His beautiful prayer or his throbbing voice, or both together, had a great effect upon me, and when I rose to my feet, I felt stronger. Although Martin was as dear to me as ever, I thought I saw my way at last. If he loved me and I loved him, I had to be brave for both of us. I had to oppose to the carnal instinct of love the spiritual impulse of renunciation. Yes, yes, that was what I had to do.

Father Dan saw me to the door.

"Give my love to my boy," he said. "And don't forget what I told you to tell him."

"I'll tell him," I replied, for though I knew my heart was bleeding I felt calm and more courageous.

It was milking time and the cows were lowing in the byre when I crossed the fields and the farmyard on my way back to my father's house. Early next morning I left it for Castle Rag.

Sixty-third Chapter

ALTHOUGH it was mid-day before I reached the Castle, the gate to the park had not been opened, the drive was deserted and even the great door to the house itself was closed.

And then, in answer to my ring, one of the maids came after a certain delay, wearing neither apron nor cap. I found the hall empty and no sign of life in the house, except a short chorus of laughter which came from the servants' quarters.

"What's the meaning of this?" I asked, but before the girl could reply, Mr. Rennepre came down to take my wraps and—

"Tell your ladyship presently." As we were going upstairs she told me that the entire house party had that morning gone off on a cruise in Mr. Rastcliff's yacht, that they would be away several days, and that Madame had left a letter for me which was supposed to explain everything.

WHAT DYSPEPTICS SHOULD EAT

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE.

Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach misery are due, more than all else, to acidity; therefore stomach sufferers should eat something which will neutralize acidity. Pure, dry bisulphate of magnesia is said as its nature, or which by chemical action in the stomach develops acidity. Pure, dry bisulphate of magnesia must foods which are rich in blood, flesh and nerve building properties, and which are easily digested; stomach sufferers are usually thin and nervous, and it is clear that anything which may help some from a well fed body, rich in blood, and a good nervous system, should be added to the dietary of stomach sufferers. Of all starchy foods, sweet or fat food, and are especially to be avoided. Physicians of extensive practice in stomach troubles, say that a certain preparation of pure, dry bisulphate of magnesia (not the ordinary citrate of magnesia, which is not the same thing) should be taken after meals; that it neutralizes the acids of fermentation and prevents food from souring on the stomach, thereby preventing gas, belching, heartburn, etc., and that it relieves the stomach of the excessive mucus with which it is loaded, and that it helps digestion and nutrition. Probably the best preparation of pure, dry bisulphate of magnesia is that which is sold in 5 grain tablet form under the name of Stuart's Bisulphate of Magnesia Compound, and which may be found at most drug stores. Some druggists may have their own private name for it, but it is the same thing. Stuart's Bisulphate of Magnesia Compound is not a patent medicine, but is a scientific preparation of pure, dry bisulphate of magnesia, as directed above, and not one which is loaded with drugs. Stuart's Bisulphate of Magnesia Compound is not a cure-all, but is a scientific remedy for stomach troubles, and is said to be the most effective and harmless remedy for indigestion, dyspepsia, gastritis, gastralgia, acid stomach, sick headache, etc.,

TY COBB GIVES SOME MORE INSIDE INFORMATION ON BIG LEAGUE BOSSES AND METHODS

Ty Cobb gives some more inside information and anecdotes about "Big League Bosses and Their Methods" in his special story for the Boston American today.

Although Connie Mack has never liked me since he accused me of purposely trying to spike Baker in Detroit when we were fighting it out with the Athletics for the pennant toward the end of the season of 1910, I have several good friends on the Philadelphia Club.

Mack got the Philadelphia fan down on me by a statement to the effect that I had tried to cut Baker r, and the next time the Tigers played the Athletics in Philadelphia I went to the bench and told "Connie" that I did not believe h e had given me a fair deal.

These friends of mine on the Athletics, however, have talked over their system with me, but of course, without giving away any pointers that would be used against the club.

"Does Connie say much to you fellows?" I asked the chaps one day.

"During a game," replied Thomas, "he lets most of us use our own judgment when we go to bat or are on the bases unless it is some kid player. He never says much if we are winning, but he talks a good deal some days when things are not going right."

I have heard a player ask Mack what he should do when he was going to the bat and have heard "Connie" reply:

But he never finds fault with a man for what he does if the play goes wrong after "Connie" himself has put it up to him.

Mack Treats the Youngsters Right.

"You did all right, old boy," he will advise later if he thinks right down in his heart that it should have been worked different, "but the next time under the same circumstances, I would try it this way."

Then he goes ahead and gives his reasons for his different point of view.

"Connie" is always careful never to break the heart of a young ball player. The slips that are made by so many managers. Once a youngster's heart is broken, as never comes back.

Mack believes in treating fresh right in their youth. He has a story of how he handled Wyckoff, a young pitcher, when he went through and won the third game of the series pitched on the morning of Decoration Day last season. Wyckoff was working against Detroit when Ford was at his best, which is exception ly good.

"We hadn't got anything that looked like a hit off Ford for eight innings, one of the Athletics told me in discussing the game. He had wonderful speed and he could put his spitter where he wanted it, and he was fooling us. But while it was a tough game to set any pitcher to, let alone a youngster, I felt sure we had started Wyckoff. Connie did not want to take a chance on pulling him and for fear the youngster would think his manager had no confidence in him.

"In the second inning, Mack talked to Wyckoff, sitting next to him on the bench with his arm around his shoulders like a father, but I caught scraps of the conversation that went on between the two youngs.

Connie Finally Won for Wyckoff.

"This kid is going pretty strong now but he's not a full distance traveler. Just hang on out there, and we'll get some runs for you," I heard Connie say once.

"It was the ninth inning before Murphy got a hit through the box. The man batted third, Frank Baupaugh, and he should have had Murphy on flatfooted as a cellar Indian off first base for he didn't play if he had thrown. But in didn't, and lost the double play. Stanfield followed the next hit, and the old ball game was won for Wyckoff.

"What did you say to your," Connie' said to Wyckoff after the game. 'I told you to stick and you would win. That's some pitching boy.'

"Connie was more thrilled over the kid winning that game than I ever saw him over anything before, excepting my friend.

"The Athletics are a clannish crowd and guard their secrets closely, especially when they think that they have found out something about an opposing club that they can turn to their advantage.

"Frank Smith, the former spitball pitcher with the Chicago White Sox, used to have a peculiar habit that tipped a batsman off to when he was going to throw his spitter. Of course whenever a spitball pitcher bluffs at throwing the wet one, he puts his hands up to his mouth just the same, so as to fool the batsman. Then he shoots a fast one.

"Now this Smith used to put his hands up to his mouth when he was going to use his fast ball, but he would not look at the ball. But when he really was to use it he would always look at it, so that it was a cinch for the wise hitter to know when the spitter was coming.

Eddie Collins Wrote the Story.

The Athletics discovered this along with several other teams in the league, but each club was keeping the fact a secret, believing that it was the only one profiting by it. After this had been known for some time, "Eddie" Collins wrote a story for a magazine after the season of 1910. In it he mentioned this peculiarity of Smith's. I did not see the article, but I heard about it.

"The other fellows on the club gave me the devil for pulling it," Eddie told me afterwards. "They said I was not only tipping Smith off to his own weakness, but that I was wising up every club in the league so that they could all hit him and win games from the White Sox.

"Why, every club in the league has known about this as long as you fellows have, 'Eddie,'" I told him. "Don't let that worry you."

The winning of two or three championships often demoralizes a team even if the material is as good.

After a victorious season managers say it is hardest to keep players on their toes and hustling. I believe it is due to the reason that no team ever took more than three pennants in succession.

The players get too sure of themselves and begin to believe that they know all the baseball there is to know and that they can't be told them anything. In other words they become blase.

Look at the Athletics of 1912. They were satiated with victory after having won two world's championships in 1910 and 1911, and they became careless. They felt sure that they would win in the end, once they got started, and so they never got started.

Some of the pitchers and several of the other members of the team were careless about keeping in condition. I remember how sure the Athletics were after within a couple of months of the end of the race.

Red Sox Failed to "Crack" That Time.

"Oh, the Red Sox will crack and we'll get them yet," one of the pitchers told me toward the middle of August.

But the Red Sox did not crack, and passed the world's series money in the bank which they had been piling up for two years. They made up their minds at the first chances last season and were hustling from start to finish.

The Cubs were over-confident in 1907 and were beaten out by Pittsburg, while the Giants of 1908 ran away from themselves after having won the world's championship of baseball.

Jennings, who is a great friend of McGraw's, has told me that the Giant leader had the making of a good idea to give his world's championship little more beauty in 1908 after having won the pennant the preceding season.

During the year that the Giants took the world's championship, McGraw had adhered to his regular plan of campaign. He was one of the strictest bosses in the business and not a Giant speck to base during the regular season or lays down in a game or tries the hit and run, or in fact, does anything else, without direct orders from McGraw, unless he desires to absorb a fine. In 1908, however, McGraw put it up to his men.

"Mac' says they ran wild on the bases," Jennings told me in discussing it. "They tried all sorts of plays at the wrong stages."

The next article in Ty Cobb's series will be published in the Boston AMERICAN Friday. He will tell some more about "Big League Bosses and Their Methods."

Six Players in Line in Chess Title Play

NEW YORK, Feb. 28.—After three preliminary rounds in the championship and general tournaments of the New York State Chess Association at the Rice Chess Club, there were six players left in each for the final round. Those whose scores enabled them to advance to the championship were: R. T. Black and J. Rosenthal, each 3—0; F. J. Marshall, G. Chajes and J. Bernstein, each with 2—1, and L. B. Meyer, 1½ to 1½.

The semi-final and final rounds of the Melvin Brown tournament, for $25 prize at the rooms of the Boston Checker Club, resulted in a tie between Messrs. Ginsberg of New York city and H. A. Reynolds of Batavia, N. Y., after the world's champion, Alfred Jordan, had been bolted out of the contest.

ZBYSZKO WILL CLAIM TITLE IF HE BEATS ABERG

Stanislaus Zbyszko, the "Mighty Pole," announced today that he would claim the world's wrestling championship if catch-as-catch-can as well as classic rules prevail when he meets Alex Aberg in their match in Mechanics building tomorrow night.

Frank Gotch, the Iowa farmer, is the present holder of the catch-as-catch-can title, having won the Greco-Roman championship.

Zbyszko makes his statement on the strength of Gotch's refusal to defend the catch-as-catch-can title along with Aberg disposed of the Polish champion, and also because he hasn't claimed a title to the title.

Aberg and Zbyszko will wind up their 1914 work at noon today. From then on only light gymnasium work will be indulged in so as to prevent a repetition of the Hackenschmidt incident of a year ago.

It will be recalled that when Lemle was training on the day of his most important matches last Winter, he received a severe injury to his ear which handicapped him greatly during the bout. Manager Tuohey does not want to have this happen again and has ordered the contestants to restrain themselves from heavy work of any sort.

Tonight Aberg and Zbyszko will be examined by physicians and their conditions passed upon. The two great rivals will also act as officials at the bout between Frank Gotsch and George Sandels at the Grand Opera House tonight. Aberg will referee and Zbyszko will keep time. Tuohey said today that he has received the biggest request for advance sale he has ever handled and indications point to a record-breaking house at Mechanics Hall tomorrow night. The demand for tickets has been so great that it has been necessary to put in 500 extra chairs on the stage.

BOWLING FACTS AND COMMENT

"CAN TOWANDA DO WHAT KERNWOOD did?" This question is being asked by hundreds of Wyoming Valley bowling fans today. Towanda must win four games from Melrose tonight to win the pennant in the Commercial League. This will be the final match of the season, and if Towanda is successful in the contest itself and Kernwood will be necessary to decide the title.

KERNWOOD WAS THROUGH THE ORdeal and not only made good, but set up a new record for the season in rolling a total of 2,990 in a match against the Clarendon Club of Somerville. The Kernwood team is on "easy street," and at the same time it frees a pretty tough proposition to Melrose, the latter club being in second place.

TOWANDA WILL BOWL AT THE MELrose Club tonight, and the match will undoubtedly be witnessed by a large number of fans. Tickets, of every club in the league will be present.

NEEDLESS TO SAY, MANY BELIEVE Kernwood has the championship up its sleeve already. Towanda will be fighting against great odds, knowing that Kernwood is on "easy street," and at the same time it frees a pretty tough proposition to Melrose, the latter club being in second place.

SPORTS ARE BEING MADE TO MATCH "Bo" Hartford and "Pop" Greenway with Harry Sands and Al Kinser. Nothing definite has been done in the matter as yet, but it is probable that the two pairs will get together at the Arch Street Alleys in the near future.

Dolls for All

Any Little Girl in New England Can Have One Free

Free Doll Week opened Monday in hundreds of New England drug stores. This week, the first one last, great big beautiful dolls with three extra dresses and three hats to match will be given to the little girls in Boston and all over the New England cities and towns.

The dolls are 21 inches tall, and are exactly the same for the person who buys a 25c bottle as for the person who buys the 50c or $1 size.

If little girls and their big friends find that their favorite druggist has no more dolls left they can obtain one entirely without charge by writing their name and address and their druggist's name on a liniment bottle wrapper at mailing it to the Minard's Liniment Mfg. Co., Framingham, Mass.

MINARD'S KING OF PAIN LINIMENT

HINTZE-M'KEE TO CHALLENGE POEHLER-WALSH

Harvey Hintze and Mickey McKee are today camping on the trail of Archie Walsh and Paul Poehler, who defeated John Oreistopher and "Red" Millar for the tandem bowling championship of New England at the New Boston alleys.

If the match is made it is more than likely that half of it will be bowled at the Winter Hill alleys, of which Hintze is custodian.

As was expected after the first ten strings had been bowled, Walsh and Poehler walked away with their match against Christopher and Millar. The complete scores for the twenty strings were: Poehler-Walsh 1,349, Christopher-Millar 1,230.

There was simply nothing to it after the first four strings. At the outset, the Chauncy bowlers proceeded to run away with the match, and they did so in fine fashion. In the first four strings Walsh pulled down 490 pins, while Poehler got 479. After that they eased up, but not until they were sure the match was theirs.

As on the previous night, Christopher found the maples would not break for him. He plugged hard, however, as did Millar, but their handicap was unsurmountable.

The complete scores of each bowler for the twenty strings were:

Christopher—83, 111, 102, 114, 94, 105, 110, 90, 99, 122, 95, 112, 114, 107, 80, 128, 126, 108, 105, 118—2,135.

HOCKEY NOTES
AND GOSSIP

THE FIRST GAME OF THE SERIES BEtween the B. A. A. and the Pilgrim A. A. hockey teams will be played at the Arena tonight, and an unusual amount of interest is being taken by the local hockey enthusiasts. For a long time the patrons of hockey have wanted the championship of the city settled, and it will be in this series.

THE B. A. A. TEAM RULES THE SLIGHT favorite, but every member of the Exeter street team knows that only the best hockey in them will bring victory. In the game for season honors Pilgrim has displayed wonderful speed, and Captain Ryan of the "Pils" believes that speed will win for his team.

THE PILGRIMS HAVE HELD SEVERAL hard practice sessions during the past week and are playing at their topmost speed. The small forward line has practiced several plays and expect to use them in the A. A. A. defense.

MUCH CREDIT SHOULD BE GIVEN DO Joe Finneran, the former New England hockey champion, for the great speed of the Pilgrim A. A. players. Finneran has worked hard in rounding the players in the best of shape, and the playing of the men speaks well for his efforts.

ON THURSDAY THE PILGRIM A. A. team will leave for Syracuse to play games on Friday and Saturday evenings with the Nationals, a hockey septet. The Pilgrims easily defeated the Syracuse team when it appeared in this city, and the local players expect no trouble in taking two more games.

THE TIE GAME BETWEEN THE FRO Bros. Publishing and the Busy Bee Beds will be played off at the Arena Friday at noon. The players are much better confining for this game and some wonderful hockey will undoubtedly be displayed. Van Boskirk of the Fro Bros Publishing team made several visits to the Arena last week and has picked up many fine points at the game.

THE FOR THE FIRST PLACE THAT EXists so long in the National Hockey Association has at last been settled, and the Toronto has a clear lead of one game. The Toronto defeated the Ottawa Senators last night, 3 to 2. The Ottawas were also defeated Saturday night, so are three games from the top.

Chadwick, g.		g., Small

The B. A. A. and Pilgrim A. A. hockey teams will clash in the first game of the series to settle the championship of the city tonight at the Boston Arena.

The B. A. A. rules a slight favorite, but many believe that the speed of the Pilgrims will wipe the Exeter street boys off their feet.

The defensive work of the B. A. A. this season has been of the highest calibre, and Freddie Huntington and "Newt" Foster are picked to stop the brilliant work of the Pilgrim forwards.

The weakness of the B. A. A. team in the wing positions will prove a handicap to the team. Charlie Foote has not displayed much speed this season and Osgood, although fast as ever, is not playing his regular strong game.

Bob Clifford and "Traf" Hicks, however, will give the Pilgrim men a lot of work to stop their rushes.

Captain Ryan of the Pilgrims has his men in the best of shape for the opening game of the series and predicts a victory.

GLOBE GIRDLERS THE GUESTS OF NOBILITY TODAY

By DAMON RUNYON,

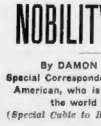
(Special Cable to Boston American)

LONDON, Feb. 25. — Baseball bumps into British nobility today. But all patriotic Americans may rest assured that it will not be baseball that recoils from the shock.



The national obsession has been taking on titles at all weights on its travels round the world and so is in the pink of condition for the encounter.

Lord Lonsdale, the famous patron of pugilism; Lord Guernsey, Lord Desborough, Sir George Riddell and numerous other heavy hitters in Burke's peerage are under contract to appear and will be cordially mittened by Sam Crawford, the Marquis of Wahoo; Larry Doyle, Duke of Harlem; Louie Comiskey, Count of Chicago; and Ted Sullivan, barnacle of baseball.

SELECT LUNCHEON FOR STARS.

Jim Thorpe will positively appear in his self-cooking plug hat especially trained for the occasion. Bill Klem, the celebrated flim filler, is bordering on nervous prostration over the prospect of meeting so much real claws.

Bill is very despondent over not having a claw hammer coat for the afternoon function, but will do his best to horn into every available inch of the films in plain clothes.

Over 150 Americans are giving the luncheon. J. R. Griffiths will preside. H. Gordon Selfridge, the famous American merchant, is taking an active part in the arrangements. The American consul general will be present. This will be the biggest event given in London in honor of the visiting Americans of any kind in recent years.

Mike Donlin says he will have a talk with any Lord who crosses his path if it costs him the Irish vote of Philadelphia. The spectacle of Joe Benz mingling with the muck mucks is expected to be extremely impressive.

Nearly all the theatres of London have been thrown open to the tourists. Larry Doyle is sincerely regretting that his days of burlesque patronage are over.

Many American actors and actresses are here and all are praying for good weather Thursday and Friday, when the teams are scheduled to play.

SUN ALMOST VISIBLE.

English sportsmen, too, are deeply interested and all the old comparisons with cricket naturally are being made. But cricket takes none the worse of the comparison in the English papers.

The weather was grand. The sun could almost be seen several times, which is said to be a record in the vicinity. The party spent the day prowling about London. Fred Merkle says he has finally located the habitat of Harry Stevens when he lived in London. The name of the place, according to Fred, is the Tower of London.

Steve Evans is a steady patron of Ye Cheshire Cheese, an inn where Ben Jonson hung out. It is believed Steve either confuses Ben Jonson with Ban Johnson or likes the place because the name is strongly reminiscent to him of the home club.

Some of the players came up today with heavy colds, the result of sleeping in the terrible draught which was created by the news that the hotel charges extra for heat.

Jim McAleer had ordered a dozen dress shirts of the latest cut to take with him to Youngstown. There he says he will spend the Summer.

WOOD SLIGHTLY BETTER, DOCTOR WIRES AMERICAN

In reply to a query from the Boston AMERICAN regarding the true condition of Joe Wood, the Red Sox star pitcher, the following telegram was received early today from Dr. Geosner, the attending physician:

> Left Joe at 4 p. m. this afternoon; is doing fine. Hope to have him in condition to make his turn in box by June 1. He spent a very restful day and was feeling considerably better. His temperature is 99 and his pulse 60. His mother came over to aid in making him comfortable, and her presence seemed to have a very gratifying effect.

EVERS IS SURE TO STAY RIGHT HERE WITH US

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

Reports continue to issue from Chicago that Johnnie Evers is to be sent back to the Chicago club. It was first given out that Ban Johnson, president of the American League, had "consented" to the arrangement as a part of the deal by which Charles Webb Murphy was eliminated from baseball.

This, of course, is nonsense. Ban Johnson has no more to do with the disposition of Evers or any other player identified with the National League than Jerome Kelly, groundskeeper at Fenway Park.

Then other reports came from Chicago that Evers would be turned back, but no authority was mentioned as the source of the reports.

The National League magnates are a funny bunch, and almost anything is to be expected of them, but in spite of this fact it is good betting that Johnnie Evers remains a member of the Boston club.

In the first place, there is the declaration of President Tener of the National League. He said on Saturday after the announcement of Murphy's retirement: "Evers will play in Boston this year. Sweeney and Perdue are still members of the Boston team."

EVERS READY FOR CAMP TRIP.

That is a very clear statement. Evers will wear a Boston uniform during the season of 1914, and the chances are that Sweeney and Perdue will also draw salary from the Boston club.

Of course, it is still possible that Captain Bill and the Gallath farmer may be turned over to Chicago, but such a thing is unlikely.

At any rate, no one connected with the Braves is worrying over Evers. His transportation from Troy to Macon has been arranged for, and the Keystone King (a cognomen bestowed upon him by Charles Webb Murphy) will, in all likelihood, begin Spring practice with the other members of Stallings' squad next Tuesday morning.

SWEENEY BUSY LITTLE BEE.

As for Sweeney and Perdue, they are in Hot Springs taking the baths, and it is expected that the day that they will journey together from the Springs to Macon and join their team mates.

A dispatch from Hot Springs yesterday said that Captain Bill took a hike over the hills of that resort in company with several players of the New York American League team.

Even with the use of a microscope it could not be seen that the dispatch contained anything about Hub Perdue taking a hike over the hills. Perdue takes his hikes in the lobby of the hotel, seated in a comfortable armchair.

SWEENEY'S FATE TO BE SETTLED BY DIRECTORS

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—The fate of Bill Sweeney and Hub Perdue will not be settled until the National League magnates gather here for the reception to the world touring Giants and White Sox, who return from abroad on March 6.

A special meeting of the board of directors of the league had been scheduled for today at Harrisburg, Pa., where President Tener holds forth as Governor of Pennsylvania. It had been planned to dispose finally of the Evers-Sweeney-Perdue case at this confab, but the meeting was called off, according to messages sent by Governor Tener to National League men in this city who had expected to attend.

The present status of the players is the same as when the magnates adjourned their meeting in New York two weeks ago. Evers is under contract to the Braves and the other two are still in the Boston reserve list.

The directors—Messrs. Hempstead, Herrmann, Ebbets, Dreyfuss and Tener—will meet on Friday, March 6, in the Waldorf-Astoria and thrash out the Evers-Sweeney-Purdue affair, as well as a number of other problems. The tourists are expected to return on the afternoon of Friday, March 6, and the big banquet in their honor is the night of Saturday, March 7.

Murphy Got $503,500 for His Cub Stock

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—Charles Webb Murphy got a check for $503,500 for his fifty-three shares in the stock of the Chicago Cubs, according to "inside information" that came today from one of the magnates who was at the Circlemail obsequies of Charles Murphy.

Murphy at first held out for $10,000 a share, but finally agreed to the smaller figure. Immediately after Mr. Taft had concluded the deal he is said to have offered to sell the fifty-three shares to Harry Ackerland of Pittsburgh, who purchased ten shares of Cub stock in the Fall of 1912 from Frank Chance, paying $1,000 a share, but Ackerland refused to buy.

Ebbets Sends Tinker Notice to Report

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.—"Forlorn" is not in the vocabulary of Charles H. Ebbets when coupled with the word "hope." Or at least so it appears from letters sent out over the Brooklyn club president's signature to Joe Tinker and Enos Kirkpatrick telling those young men to report to Manager Robinson of the Dodgers at Augusta, Ga. The notice to Kirkpatrick was mailed a week ago, mentioning last Sunday as the time for him to arrive at the camp. The order to Tinker is that he be on hand next Sunday.

Evers Fears He May Lose $20,000 Bonus

CHICAGO, Feb. 25.—Johnny Evers is in town today and expressed a fear that the $20,000 citus he has been promised for signing with Boston will never reach him and that the last he will get is the $10,000 salary his contract calls for. He said:

"The agreement between Murphy and Gaffney, by which Sweeney and Perdue were to go to Chicago in exchange for me, is the catch. Unless these men report to Chicago the agreement to pay over the money don't go, I am told."

PACKEY M'FARLAND TELLS WHY HE'LL QUIT THE BOXING GAME

Written Especially for the Boston American.

By PACKEY M'FARLAND.

It has been my intention right along to make my contest with Mike Gibbons, about which there has been a lot of useless wrangling, the last of my career. And I consider that I have good and sufficient reasons for making my next big battle my last one, whether it be with Gibbons or any other man.

Gibbons is the man I want for one very good reason. I want to get enough money for boxing him to furnish me with a trip around the world, on which I am figuring at the present time. Such a trip would be a honeymoon for me. Isn't that a good enough reason, if you are comfortably fixed otherwise in the world's goods, for quitting the game?

Now I have figured over the entire field and I cannot see that there is a man in sight with whom I could get nearly as much money as I can—and will, too, mark that—with the so-called St. Paul phantom.

Packey Demands $10,000 for Battle with Gibbons.

My price is $10,000 for boxing him, not at all exorbitant, considering that I received as much as that for battling Matt Wells ten rounds in New York. And he was merely lightweight champion of England, while Gibbons is an overgrown welterweight, a near middleweight, who will outweigh me by several pounds.

My biggest reason for quitting the boxing game when most people tell me that I should be right in my prime, is one that will appeal to the average man who never has been in athletics actively. It is this:

I am so heartily sick of training that I hate the sight of a gymnasium.

I recall that two or three years ago when Frank Gotch was training here for one of his big wrestling matches, I ran into him and had a chat. I asked him why he was doing so much exercise, as he had announced that matching to be his last.

"I'm sick of training, that's all," he said. "I delight in the actual wrestling, but that grind leading up to it is awful."

"Why, that's just the part of it that I like," I replied, enthusiastically.

He looked at me and laughed gently.

"I did, too, at your age," he replied not unkindly. Then, letting his hand on my shoulder, he said:

Training Grind Drives Athletes Into Retirement.

"When a man gets past thirty any sort of athletic work is mighty hard, especially the kind of work that a wrestler must go through to fit him for a hard battle. You'll find it so, too, sure, but you have a long way to go, perhaps, before it strikes you that way."

I've never forgotten his words, and now they are coming home to me. Ball players, boxers and other athletes who have become comparatively old in a sordid way have told me that when they get enough money to insure comfort for their remaining days that they lose athletic ambition.

That it is with me. I don't dislike like Gotch, the actual work of a contest. It isn't work when you are in perfect condition. But that grind of getting for a contest, the almost ceaseless, dreary, weary, grinding hours on the road in the morning, afternoonsness of the rondowns, the telling, heavy work in the gymnasium in the afternoon with sparring mates—it's all too much after a man has been at it year after year.

So I'm sure the Gibbons battle will be the last for me.

He's a great man, is Mike, a likeable fellow personally, always open, on the level and sincere in all that he does, and I'll add in earnestness that he is one of the greatest of modern boxers.

But he cannot beat me. Perhaps I will not beat him, but that's another matter. You may be sure that I'm not going to end my career with a defeat.

Why, I've never had a bloody nose in the ring yet. True, I've got my fingers crossed as I write this, but I'll wind up the subject of Mike Gibbons by saying that I do not believe that the speedy Mike, with all of his skill and hitting power, is going to give me the first one, either.

Mabel Herbert Urner's Great Series:

Their Married Life

Warren and Mr. Stevens Cook Supper on the Maid's Sunday Night Off.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER

WARREN, his hands in his pockets stood scowling out the window at the snow-swirled, wind-driven street.

"It's too blamed cold to go out."

"Henry, there's not a thing!" protested Mrs. Stevens.

"Then we'll send out for some stuff. What do you say, Mrs. Curtis? Rather have something here, or go out? The car's ordered"

Helen hesitated. She was not sure that Mrs. Stevens would want them fussing around the kitchen when the maid was off.

"But it's Sunday! You can't get anything, can you?"

"Plenty of delicatessen shops open."

"See here, why not make just Hot Stuff," suggested Warren. "Did Wilson give you that recipe the night we had it at his stag supper?"

"That's so, he did." Mr. Stevens looked through some papers in his wallet. "I've got it right here."

"But Henry, that takes boiled ham and cheese," as he read the recipe.

"Get that at a delicatessen, can't we?"

"Oh, I say Stevens," interrupted Warren, "let's you and I make this. Keep out the women folks till we're through."

"Now, you're not going to mess up Lizzie's kitchen, she'll be——"

But Mr Stevens had already started kitchenward. "Fine idea. Come on, Curtis, let's find out what we'll need."

"Lizzie'll be furious—and they'll not make anything fit to eat. NOW what have they done?" Mrs. Stevens started up as a clash of pans and shouts and shouts of laughter came from the kitchen.

But they were not allowed to enter. Mr. Stevens barricaded the door.

"No admission till we get the job under way. But hold on, Emily, just tell us where you keep the eggs."

"Why, in the icebox, of course."

THE EGG MYSTERY

"Nope. None there. Curtis, put three eggs on that list."

"Of course, we've eggs, plenty of eggs," insisted Mrs. Stevens. "They've split or broken something in there—that's why they won't let us in. But we might as well let them alone. Oh, I'll show you that new corset I was telling you about."

There is nothing more fascinating to women than the discussion of the lines of a new corset, and it was fully a half hour before they thought of returning to the kitchen.

This time they were allowed to enter, for both Warren and Mr. Stevens were busy trying to fasten the meat chopper to the table.

They were both in their shirt sleeves. Warren, with a long roller towel pinned up on his shoulders and hanging almost to his heel, while Mr. Stevens had a white cloth pinned around his generous waist line.

"Why, Henry," indignantly, "that's the bread cloth."

But Mr. Stevens was absorbed in an inspection of the three blades that went with the meat chopper.

"'Use finest cutter,'" read Warren from the recipe. "How in thunder can you tell which is the finest? Here, this must be it."

Then they opened the packages the hall boy had just brought. There was boiled ham, cheese, eggs and a box of crackers.

With a gleeful chuckle, Warren cut up the cheese and began grinding it through the chopper in eloquent imitation of the hand org a man.

"Hold on there!" expostulated Mr. Stevens. "That stuff's got to be weighed. You can't guess at this thing—we want to have it right."

"But Henry, we haven't any scales. Lizzie broke ours last month."

A WAY OUT

"How about the postage scales?" suggested Warren. "Didn't I see some on your desk? They'll weigh a quarter of a pound."

Mrs. Stevens brought out the postage scales, and while they weighed the ham and cheese Helen read the recipe.

WILSON'S "HOT STUFF."

¼ lb. boiled ham.
6 eggs.
¼ box (six ordinary square soda crackers).
½ pint milk.
1 teaspoon Worcestershire Sauce.
½ teaspoon baking powder.

Use finest cutter of any meat chopper. Run cheese through first, then the ham and then the crackers. Empty all in a mixing bowl, add Worbestershire Sauce, red pepper and salt. Salt freely. Then add milk and mix thoroughly. Should be the consistency of a thick batter—if not, add more milk. Beat the eggs until very light, then mix in with batter. Sprinkle baking powder over the top and stir in lightly. Bake slowly in buttered earthen baking dish until brown.

"Phew, this thing's getting all stuck up," complained Warren, for the chopper was now clogged with ham and cheese.

"Run a couple of crackers through—that'll clean it out."

"There, don't that look fine?" when it was all run through and the chopper cleaned with a final cracker. "Now what's the next thing?"

"Half pint of milk."

Helen, who had always doubted the tidiness of Mrs. Stevens much-lauded maid, could not resist a critical glance about the kitchen. The stove was not clean. The burners and dripping pan were crusted with grease, and a smoke-stained newspaper lined the warming pan.

The shelves were not over orderly, and the top of the icebox was piled with bags and boxes. And yet she had every convenience. There was an expensive kitchen cabinet, with its blue and white cereal and spice jars, the kind Helen had always wanted.

LAST TOUCHES

"Fine. Pitch 'em in. Now, Emily, where's your baking powder?"

The eggs and baking powder were stirred in and the batter poured into a baking dish.

"Oh, turn off some of those foot lights," as Warren opened the oven and found that Mr. Stevens had lit up both rows of burners.

"No, we'll want the whole show on in the beginning—need a good hot oven to start her off."

"All right, here she goes," and Warren slipped the dish in, slammed to the oven door, and wiped his hands on his roller towel bib. "You're going to have a real treat. That'll be the best stuff you ever tasted. Now you two hurry and set the table."

"But what'll we have with it?" asked Mrs. Stevens.

"Nothing. It's a whole meal in itself. Got a few bottles of beer, haven't you?" glancing in the icebox. "Well, that's all we'll want."

When Helen and Mrs. Stevens had finished setting the table, Warren appeared with a fork in one hand and a dish towel in the other.

"Just come in here and have a sniff!"

"If it'll only taste as good as it smells," laughed Mrs. Stevens, sniffing the delicious odor that came from the oven.

"Take a look at that, Emily," and Mr. Stevens opened the oven door. "See if you don't think that's done."

"Why, yes. I should think so," cried Mrs. Stevens.

"Let's take it out. Everything in it is cooked anyway," and shoving Mr. Stevens aside Warren lifted out the pan.

"Yes indeedy, that's hot!" dropping it on the table.

Warren insisted on serving it, which he did with an arrogant air of efficiency.

A SUCCESS

"How about it?" Ever taste anything better in your life? Now, here's a dish that's invented by a man. Square meal in itself. Don't need a lot of side frills to help out."

"That's so," agreed Mr. Stevens, "if men did more of the cooking there'd be more dishes like it. A woman can be in the kitchen all her life and never make up a dish of her own. Women lack initiative. Their minds aren't inventive."

"That's right," broke in Warren. "All the labor saving devices for housework are men's ideas. Every kitchen convenience was invented by a man. A woman never——"

"Oh, you two are insufferable," bantered Mrs. Stevens. "Just because you made one dish and messed up the whole kitchen! Now stop bragging about it and give us some more," passing her plate.

"Humph, you don't say a word about it being good—but you stow it away all right. How about you, Helen? Want some more?"

"Yes, dear. It's very nice."

"Very nice?" with a snort. "Make it rather better than that—you don't get any."

"Well, then it's DELICIOUS!"

"That's better."

"Next time we'll double that recipe," mused Mr. Stevens. "Hardly enough here for four."

"Well that was some dish! Now, Helen, since Stevens and I've done all the work, suppose you and Mrs. Stevens pitch in and clean things up."

His Majesty — The Big Boss — BY NELL BRINKLEY

Somebody's Kiddie

EMPIRES, and Kings in ermine and red-gold crowns are slipping one by one into the doors of oblivion that line the "corridors of time." Loyal subjects grow weary of the weight of the sceptre on their shoulders—sniff their noses at knighthood in payment for unquestioning allegiance and meekness—and pull the sparkling monarch down from his high seat, snap his sceptre over their knee, and dent his golden crown! Dynasties and Caliphates and Kingdoms will some day be only in faery-tales—kings will ride there in gold-link mail with the fox-brush of the hunt in their helmets. Why, shut your eyes and think! Didn't a Princess always mean to you a picture of a pretty creature in white and gold brocade with chains about her neck and waist, angel sleeves, ripply hair with pearls plaited through, a circlet on her head and pointed slippers? And she rode a white palfrey with a jingling hawk on her wrist, and ate honey mostly. And if anybody put even a rose-leaf between her elderdown coverlets she drooped in the morning and sighed: "I haven't slept a wink all night. There was something in my bed and it's bruised me from head to foot!" That was a Princess. Wasn't it? Now—you flip over the leaves of a magazine—and find a snapshot of a lady—a PLAIN lady—in a tweed skirt, heavy walking boots, an old-fashioned coat and a funny little hat, with a real nice human sort of smile on her face, with the sun in her eyes, and a golf club over her shoulder (and most likely her toes will be turned in a trifle) and under it will be this unassuming talk, "THE PRINCESS SO AND SO." You see—the imperial, the kingly, the royal, the princely, are vanishing like snow dust. For that isn't a real Princess. Only in faery tales will Majesty be.

'Course, right here in cloud-kissing Boston town there are a few "bosses" left! Maybe they, too, will go. Every reign falters and fades at last—but there's one small person—one Sovereign whose sway will be absolute when the light of the moon goes out—one small atom who will ride the whirlwind and play first fiddle forever and ever, amen! His crown will keep on a-shining—never a revolution will tear up the borders of his kingdom—everybody at his house will go round and round his little finger and be jolly happy doing it. His mother will talk baby-language to him and give him the very blood from her warm heart. His father will stand on his head and shake hands with his foot to make him laugh, and wear patches on his shoes so His Majesty may have "extras." His granny will be second mother and his Grand-daddy jester and lover clear 'til the Good God stills the humming world. Lo! His Majesty—the Big Boss—just a baby—B. K.—Somebody's Kiddie! Kings drift into Mythom with the Hanging Gardens of Babylon—and subjects rise and overthrow them—but here's one King who will hold the reins by "Divine Right" for always and never be deposed. Isn't that so—you folks who have just "come into" a Boss in your house?

—NELL BRINKLEY.

Household Suggestions

When buying a goose, see that the skin is white, the breast full, plump and fleshy, and the apron covered with white fat. The bill and feet of a young goose are of a yellow color; there are but few hairs about the legs at the termination of the thigh. As they become old the bill and feet acquire a reddish tint, and the body and feet become hairy. A full-grown goose should be hung at the least three or four days after it is killed, that it may become tender.

Coppers which are made of a cheaper and inferior metal often cause the lime of the water form a very thick curd, which boils into the clothes and makes them very unsightly. Such a copper should be coated with a layer of whitewash after each time of use, and while the copper is still warm. In addition to this precaution, it is well to make a large bag of unbleached calico for holding the clothes and keeping them from contact with the copper.

To cook foreign eggs and make them equal in flavor to fresh country eggs, try this plan. Prick a hole with a needle each end of the egg, then put into boiling water and boil for three minutes. Remove from the pan, open the top of the shells a little, so that the air cells can expand. Replace in the pan again for a minute or so, and they will then be cooked deliciously.

Do You Know That—

Princess Mary, in accordance with a promise made to her some time back by the Duchess of Fife, sealed the last maiden signature of Her Royal Highness—excepting the signature in the marriage register. The luncheon served the Princess' sister-in-law at Buckingham Palace on the afternoon before the wedding was a dainty affair. Queen Alexandra had offered the Duchess a tea in hold to any charity Her Royal Highness might name for her last maiden signature.

Holland was in a deplorable state in the year 1814. Oppressive taxation reigned supreme, commerce was greatly restricted, trade and manufacture were almost ruined and the population was rapidly decreasing. The dykes were neglected and the sea inundated large districts, hundreds of houses being demolished.

In 1814 there were, of course, no railways. All travel was by stagecoach or on horseback. Coaches broke records at ten or twelve miles an hour. All heavy goods traveled by canal or else by stage wagons, each drawn by six, eight, or even ten horses, and lumbering along at perhaps two miles an hour.

It is stated that more steel and iron are used annually in the manufacture of typewriters and pens than in the manufacture of arms and ordnance.

Miss Fairfax Writes On

When I Was a Girl

How This Remark from Mother to Daughter Causes Sullen Resentment to Many

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

EVERYTHING depends upon the manner in which it is spoken. There are some mothers who begin softly, "When I was a girl," and their daughters listen with wide opened eyes and a sympathetic understanding, and there are other mothers who have only to mention the days of their girlhood to arouse sullen resentment and irritability in their daughters' breasts.

They know that the commonest of all that bygone day stands for is courtesy, is to be unfavorable to themselves. They have learned through much reiteration that "When I was a girl" precludes a criticism and never a commendation.

Of such misunderstanding and misunderstood daughters is composed the writer of the following letter:

"I am eighteen and am keeping company with a young man of twenty-two. Now, I am a girl who does not go out much. He calls Wednesdays and Sundays, and once in a while on a Sunday we go to visit friends, but I never go out nights.

"My mother constantly finds fault about it. She says, 'It is a wonder you don't go to a theatre instead of staying around the house. When I was a girl my beau took me to the theatre every week.'

"She also calls him a 'cheap sport,' and says other unpleasant things. Now, I love this young man, and it hurts me to have her say these things. She also says that he is a nice young man, and all right, but always adds, 'Why doesn't he take you for a good time?'

"If you were in my place what would you say to her?

"If I were in your place, my dear girl, I would try hard to think that there is some incline to what my mother says, and make an effort to change conditions to suit her if she has shown the common heritage of all womankind she has learned that there are few theatres, few parties, few amusements of any kind in the world of a woman who is a wife and mother, and the pleasures of this kind which were hers as a girl grow bright in retrospection. She has what is commonly known among women as a "good time" as a girl, with theatre-box and table and parties making youth worth while. Naturally, she wants her daughter to know the same pure feasting, from her own experience perhaps, that unless youth brings to you some recreations you will never know things.

She is right in a degree. The lover who is never expected to spend a dollar on his sweetheart falls naturally into the ways of the husband who begrudges the penny. You are right, too, in a degree. Right in saving your evenings as it pleases you right in smarting under a criticism of time spent so innocently. I can assure you keeping back the money today that if you spent it for theatre tickets and left home the night before something more to complete dress, and am proud of you that you suppress it.

But don't let your sweetheart get into the habit of feeling that you are too indulgent for anything trying. Remind your own four walls. The time will come to him when he will know safety of the restful pleasure of lounging at the fire all evening, and when he wanders forth for a change he will return to your presence in a contented manner forth alone.

There is always something to be learned from "When I was a girl." Though there is a rasping note in the voice that utters it.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

CERTAINLY

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am eighteen and have been keeping company with a young man for the past seven months. For the past two months we haven't seen each other as much as we used to, but still I feel as though I would like to see it to prove for me in the world to find out if he is still true to me as he was at first.

I would show a very spiteful spirit, and I hope he will be man enough to appreciate it, don't you think so, and don't apologize a second time.

J. L. H.

THAT DEPENDS

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

About two months ago my room and I were introduced to a couple of young men, whom we have been keeping company with steadily. Last time we were out with them a couple of weeks ago, one of the said young men asked me if I would go with him to a dance, but my chum said that she had not been asked yet, so I told him I would not go with him unless he asked my friend and do not want to lose her company, so I told him I would not be able to keep the engagement, since I am nevertheless going with her.

I do not think I am to blame, do you? I would not have accepted if I

Make This and Try It for Coughs

This Home-Made Remedy Has No Equal for Prompt Results.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with ½ pint of warm water and stir for 2 minutes. Put 2½ ounces of Pinex (fifty cents worth) in a pint bottle, then add the Sugar Syrup. Take a teaspoonful every two or three hours.

This simple remedy takes hold of a cough more quickly than anything else you ever tried. It usually conquers an ordinary cough within 24 hours. Splendid for croup, whooping cough, hoarseness and bronchitis. It stimulates the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps to relieve a cold.

This makes more and better cough syrup than you could buy ready-made for $2.50, and it acts perfectly and lasts pleasant.

Pinex is a concentrated compound of genuine Norway white pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and other healing elements which are so healing to the membranes. Other preparations will not work in this plan.

Making cough syrup with Pinex and sugar syrup for strained honey has proved so popular throughout the United States and Canada that it is often imitated but the old, successful mixture has never been equaled.

A guaranty of absolute satisfaction, or money promptly refunded goes with this preparation. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Ft. Wayne, Ind.

Thin Folks Who Would Be Fat

Increase in Weight ten Pounds or More

A Physician's Advice.

"For those who are thin and would like to add to their pounds of flesh and to their physical charms, I cannot recommend anything more highly than Sargol," said a well-known physician recently. "Sargol will help any thin person to put on good, healthy flesh, and will increase the weight surprisingly in a very short time. It is a scientific flesh builder, and one of the best and most powerful of the kind that I have ever known. Sargol is not a patent medicine, but is a concentrated form of organic iron, and is prepared for the use of thin people who want to put on flesh in a reasonable time. Sargol has been used by thousands of people with astonishing results, and I have no doubt that it will do as much for every thin person who will give it a fair trial. Many of my patients who have used Sargol have increased their weight ten pounds or more in a few weeks' time, and have remained well and strong long after they stopped taking the treatment. Sargol is sold by druggists everywhere at one dollar per large package, and is guaranteed to put on flesh in the way mentioned above, or the druggist is authorized to refund the money."

LATEST STOCK MARKETS

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor

Stocks were lower this afternoon than they were at the opening, and they started with declines. After a very dull morning and with a continued lull at midday bears put some pressure on several stocks and the whole list sagged quickly in response. The market did not appear to have any underlying strength, and one rumor from abroad was that the British government is behind the effort of public opinion throughout the empire in regard to the murder of British subjects in Mexico, was finding it more difficult to coincide with Sir Edward Grey, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, Montgomery at Washington.

Among declines in New York were General Motors preferred 2½, Rock Island 2, Great Northern preferred 1¾, Missouri, Kansas & Texas 2, National Biscuit 1¾, Reading 1¾, Southern Pacific 1¾, Missouri Pacific 1, Reading 1¼, Lehigh Valley 1¼, Union Pacific 1¼, Steel ¾, Amalgamated ¼, Union Pacific 1¾, New Haven ¾, Baltimore & Ohio ¼, and Great Northern ¼.

Tamarack, second to Boston and among other mines to New Haven, Butte & Superior 5¾, Calumet & Arizona ¾, Granby ¾, Lake ¼, Nevada Consolidated ¼, Elevated and American Telephone were each up an eighth, while United Fruit and Shoe common were unchanged.

MARKET OPENED WEAKER.

The New York market was weaker at the opening, conditions of yesterday prevailing, and while there was neither change in sentiment nor price tendency. Prices eased off a little. Gould stocks received a little attention, but other issues were lower than for some time. American issues had receded fractionally in London and Paris with exceptions while by afternoon Canadian Pacific was nearly a point lower there. The general tendency in the market was heavy. It was stated that the British public is giving much attention to the Mexican situation and is much more exercised over the butchery of a British subject by recalcitrants than are apparently the government on the part of the press which supports the latter. There was a disposition to sell American stocks for that reason.

TRADING CONTINUED DULL.

Trading continued dull, first hour transactions totalling of about 52,000, there being no spurt afterwards. About all the buying was on recessions, and demand for stocks was not enough to render conditions important to prices. Bears were not aggressive, however. Both sides were in a waiting mood. Wall Street does not like the situation at Washington, and is not influenced much by reports that President Wilson is not going to permit Congress to restrict large industrial and commercial operations too much through the proposed Federal Trade Commission. There will be considerable purchase of great interests probably as long as Congress is in session. Railroad earnings and reports as to business conditions are not optimistic in spite of statements to the contrary by officials. The market lacked features of interest. The mine drill has appeared to be overdone for days, but it is believed that anything favorable would cause a good rise. Talk regarding the Union Pacific situation reflected an under current of foreboding. There is a feeling that if a movement in Union Pacific on revelations of fact by the State Department some of the holdouters are likely to prove startling.

"RATY" A WEAK ISSUE.

Missouri, Kansas & Texas was a weak issue during the morning, declining nearly two points and selling at 18¼ by noon. Other active issues were almost all lower by a small margin, although General Motors had declined more than a point. Business was even less active during the last half of the forenoon than the one grew heavier. During the noon hour there was no improvement in either respect as regards the list as a whole. By afternoon bears asserted a raid and there was a sharp decline. The fall of prices has not tempted the public to buy. This is also to be considered at, considering how much the market has mystified of late its professional followers.

NARROW MOVEMENT HERE.

The price movement was as narrow in Boston as in New York, and if there was any more steadiness here around the start it was due to apathy more than to anything else. Granby and American Agricultural Chemical were among the weakest issues in early transactions. Boston & Maine continued dull and heavy. New Haven was off a trifle. It is expected that Chairman Elliott will reverse New Haven policy and confer again with Attorney-General McReynolds at Washington tomorrow in regard to the appointment of Boston & Maine trustees.

FINANCIAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

The London copper warrants market was weak this morning and by noon spot and futures were off 7s. 6d. each. It grew firm later and at the close spot was up 1s. 6d. and futures 2s. 9d.

For January the operating revenue of the Baltimore & Ohio showed a comparative decrease of $1,107,844. The decrease in net operating revenue was $465,645. Operating revenue decreased $102,715 in seven months, while the net decrease is not for that period was $1,338,362.

Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON

The price of gasoline took another terrible yesterday. It fell from seventeen cents to sixteen cents a gallon and the rest of high-living has been reduced correspondingly.

There is joy in the camp of the motorists, the reduction having come at a time when but few can afford to buy gasoline. Do we not sing "Auld Lang Syne" with a few notes just to show that they do not entirely forget about that one cent, three cents on the gallon.

About a year ago the price of gasoline began increasing tremendously, it being in leaps and bounds from seven to eighteen cents a gallon in one sale, and where a man had been paying eighteen, he was forced to pay twenty-five cents a gallon in the next twenty-seven cents. But, there is a good time coming, it is said, and that reduction is the second within the last few months.

One begins to have hopes that sooner or later the wholesale price will be reduced to the old time level of eleven cents, and that the motorists may buy it for fifteen and sixteen cents. That time, however, is probably quite distant.

In nine states in which the legislatures are convening there are no less than 114 measures relating to motorists and automobiles being considered. Twenty-eight of these bills provide for the registration of a registration fee. Twenty-eight are for regulating speed, with seven providing for the carrying of lights on vehicles.

Massachusetts leads all the other States in the number of bills considered, it having no less than forty-four on her desks while New Jersey has sixteen, Kentucky thirteen, Virginia nine, New York nine, South Carolina seven, Maryland six, Rhode Island and Mississippi three each.

What would the legislators do? It were no: for the motor vehicles which—to them—is idle.

Operation?

According to last accounts there is considerable doubt as to the ability of holding the Vanderbilt and Grand Prize cups at Santa Monica on Thursday next. Latest reports from that place announce that much damage has been done to the roads in that vicinity and it looks as though the race in relation to the carrying event from Savannah to Milwaukee has found its way to the Pacific Coast.

FORBES URGES KINDNESS IN HIGH PLACES

By B. C. FORBES, Business Editor.

The crowd was surging, pushing, squeezing, elbowing, struggling to enter a subway car. One unfortunate was jostled against a hulking, middle-aged, well-dressed man, who retaliated by bumping him roughly and ill-naturedly with the right shoulder. Once inside the giant, who had found a seat, noticed that the poor fellow, left standing, was very lame, one leg being shorter than the other.

The gentleman covered with shame at his brutality, rose from his seat, offered it to them and in very emphatic but courteous language insisted that they accept it. Then he left the car at the next station, amid the plaudits of the passengers.

Whether if this incident commonplace enough in a busy city, can convey to you the sentiment, the tenderness, the kindness, another teaches. A famous writer sat on the platform, holding down a seat for a few thousand fares. In his account of the gathering he called those who passed "the rich and the well-to-do." That fine, however, is probably quite distant.

Twenty-eight of these bills provide for the registration of a registration fee. Twenty-eight are for regulating speed, with seven providing for the carrying of lights on vehicles.

J. Ogden Armour Finds Business Good

CHICAGO, Feb. 25.—J. Ogden Armour is optimistic on business, but not on the position of the country's railroads. He says:

"Our own business is excellent; as good as last year. Our turnover than far this year has been satisfactory and our profits have run far equalled those of 1913.

"On one point, however, I must qualify: Railroad earnings are poor. So Paul's business is unsatisfactory. In order to make money at going rates railways must have a heavy traffic. Their traffic is light."

Two ladies and a gentleman, finding they could not rise higher, got out and walked toward a luxuriant restaurant. One of the ladies accidentally stepped near the edge of the sidewalk and almost brushed against the marchers. She shrank back with a look of horror on her face and an ostentatious shrug of the shoulders. Some of the toilers noticed the exhibition, and there was a mild jeer—nothing more.

* * *

But there MIGHT have been something more. Is there not danger that there will be something more one day if the rich and rule treat the poor and indiscriminate with such supercilious scorn?

* * *

The thread linking these diverse happenings may not be apparent, but the thread is there, I think.

* * *

What I see in the incidents is that it behooves the strong to realize the weakness of the weak, that the rich are not so very strong, that there is very little difference between the rich and the urge of life in one class and another, that those who carry too high airs and persist in demonstrations of affected superiority are apt to court their own undoing, and that all of those they despise.

* * *

The conception of human beings at frail and needing kindness is one that I adopted by those who sit in the seats of the mighty and by all who are well equipped for the battle of life is not likely to leave a bitter taste in the mouth at the end.

And meanwhile the application of this spirit would tend not only to hasten the ushering in of the brotherhood of man but would help to solve one of the pressing economic, social and political problems that today harass the world.

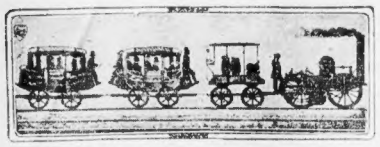
Do You Want to Feel Hopeful?

Look at This Old-Fashioned "Train of Cars" and Realize That the Possibilities of Progress Are Without Limit

Copyright, 1914, by Star Company

Our good, great friend and poetical genius, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, sends us a picture of the first steam train in America and says, "I feel as if you should make an editorial on this, you can do it so much better than I."



THE FIRST STEAM TRAIN IN AMERICA.

I was born in 1878 in Buffalo, N. Y. In 1932 I traveled five days on the Erie Canal, Buffalo to Schenectady, 313 miles, where I took this train for Albany, N. Y. Length of Railroad 17 miles.

If you are discouraged about yourself, or discouraged about the future of the human race, which is considerably more important than yourself, look at this picture of the first steam train in America.

See the funny locomotive, the big wheels, the man standing on board. Looking at that, you could hardly believe that the great Mogul engine would come in due time—or that the electric engine would supplant the Mogul.

See the funny old-fashioned characters, imitating the stage coach with a man in front and a man behind—like the driver and the guard on the coach.

Here was the first railroad train in America. The whole thing looks like a parody on railroading today. Yet it was, up to that time, the most important thing that ever had happened in the country, when this comical little engine pulled out with its excited load of SIXTEEN passengers.

We have traveled a long way since this was the great railroad of the United States.

The world has progressed considerably since this express train, crawling slowly along the rails, announced the beginning of modern transportation methods.

When you see what has happened in railroad development since this picture was made, less than a hundred years ago, how can you doubt the power of the race, or the individual in ANY line of improvement?

When they were starting the first steam railroad, wise men said that nobody could travel at twenty miles an hour for a long time—without being killed by the speed.

We know now that a man could easily go five thousand miles an hour, so far as his own safety were concerned, if the train stayed on the track and he were in a closed car.

An inventor announces—what would have been looked upon as insanity a few years ago—that he is arranging to cross the ocean in fifteen hours with a hydro-aeroplane.

The only comment made by the common sense man is, "WHY FIFTEEN HOURS? WHY such a LONG time?"

Fifteen hours to go three thousand miles with a machine that travels on the air without friction is a ridiculously long time.

DO NOT FOR A MOMENT DOUBT THAT MEN NOW LIVING WILL CROSS THE OCEAN IN THREE HOURS.

The human race is a child, it has just learned to walk. The steam engine represented the pitiful first walking. The flying machine means that the child really can walk and is AT LAST FREE FROM THE POWER OF THE LAW OF GRAVITATION.

The man who built this old-fashioned train would have laughed at you if you had suggested going from Boston to Chicago in a train made of steel, lighted with electricity, cooled by electric fans, heated by steam, with bath tubs, library, restaurant, separate beds, covering a thousand miles in less than twenty hours.

A few old-fashioned individuals smile if you suggest that the flying machine will go a thousand miles an hour. But it WILL do it.

Already a man has traveled hundreds of miles without stopping at an average speed of more than a hundred and twenty-four miles an hour in a flying machine.

The trip around the world in twenty-four hours, with the sun always exactly above your head, will happen before this century shall have ended. And that will be the BEGINNING of man's conquest of this planet. He will be able to go out and look over his possession, the earth, between sunrise and sunrise, as a big farmer looks over his farm between sunrise and sunset.

When you see what wonderful changes, achievements, "miracles" are possible in material things, why do you despair of the human race and its possibilities in any direction?

If we can overcome the law of gravitation, shall we not overcome poverty, injustice, misery, drunkenness and ignorance?

If man can do what he has done for the engine, the flying machine and the other material things, will he not do as much proportionately FOR HIMSELF when he shall have learned to understand himself and develop himself?

And this funny old picture sent by our young and vivacious contributor, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, PROVES IT.

HOW BILL GOT ALONG---No. 3

BILL ARRIVES IN BOSTON

When Bill got off the train in the North Station it was just about dusk. As he reached the street and looked at the miles and miles of awe-inspiring buildings that were just beginning to be lighted, and heard the steady buzz and purr of the great city—Bill began to get a bit nervous and thought to himself: "Gee whiz! WHAT a place, and I've got to make a living out of it somehow." He asked a policeman how to get to the address of his boy friend—the one who had come back to Bill's town from Boston and whose talk had decided Bill to make his try in Boston. The policeman directed him, and as Bill walked up the street he heard a roar overhead that made him think some of the high buildings were falling on him, for they didn't have elevated trains in the town Bill came from. After much questioning on Bill's part he finally arrived at the address.

The landlady told him his friend roomed there, but was not at home just then, but that he could go up to his friend's room and wait for him. Which Bill did, and as he sat in the little dingy room and realized that the ride in the trains and the excitement of the trip was over, a strange lump arose in his throat, that feels like indigestion, but is commonly called homesickness. Finally his friend came in—much surprised at seeing Bill, and his first comment was, "Where'd you get that small town wardrobe? You'll never get a job if you go around wearing that kind of scenery." As Bill lay in bed that night he kinda wished he was back in his own home, but as long as he was in Boston he made up his mind to stick it out. Also, the first thing in the morning of some of his $30 was going for some new "scenery," as his friend called it.—H. C.

The Two Sisters

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER XXXIV.

In all her short life Caryl had never been so chagrined and wounded as she was by Harry Somerdyke's cavalier manner when she met him with another girl. As the poor little stenographer walked away from the great hotel, her heart was but within her. Her vanity was cut to the quick. She was not accustomed to receiving attention from men, and she had believed from Somerdyke's manner that he found in her the most attractive woman he had ever met.

If not, why had he sought her society and paid her such marked attention? She had supposed that after he knew her better he would ask her to be his wife. She had made mental pictures of the home she would some time have, above all of the beautiful gowns she would wear, gowns as handsome as the one she had seen on the lay figure in the costume exhibit at the hotel. Yet just now when she saw the man of her dreams in the company of a fashionable girl, he had hardly recognized his companion of the day before, and his bearing had been cold and haughty. She had suddenly felt that he was looking down upon her, and that in his estimation she was inferior to the pretty creature by his side.

Hour after hour, while she walked the streets, then returned to her room and tried to rest, the fire of indignation burned. At 5 o'clock, as arranged last night, she met her sister at the entrance to Baird's.

"Well," said Julia, as the pair started together, "where shall we get something to eat?"

"Oh, I don't care," replied Caryl listlessly.

"My plan," remarked Julia, ignoring the indifferent manner, "is to get an early supper, and take the trolley out into the country, or at least into the suburbs. It ought to be lovely out there tonight, for there is not a cloud in the sky and there is going to be a gorgeous moon."

"All right," assented Caryl. "I have some things I want to talk to you about, and all that time together will give me the chance."

"Is anything wrong?" asked Julia solicitously.

She had brooded so long upon her grievance that she felt she must share it with her sister. While matters went pleasantly, she did not need Julia, but when they went awry she turned to her instinctively. However, she did not feel like talking just yet. She was faint, for she had eaten no luncheon, as her temper had taken away her appetite. Her sister eyed her anxiously when she learned of her fasting.

"Why, my dear little girl," she demurred, "you should not starve yourself like that."

"I wasn't hungry," said Caryl. "But do let's get something decent to eat now. I'm sick of cheap messes."

Julia hesitated. "Then you would rather not go to Wild's for supper perhaps?" she suggested.

"Indeed I would rather not!" returned Caryl. "Do let us go to some restaurant that's not so common."

"Swell restaurants are entirely beyond my means," Julia reminded her timidly. Then she remembered that she had heard one of the floor walkers in Baird's talking to a friend of a certain Italian restaurant where one could "get a good dinner with wine for seventy-five cents." This did not seem cheap to Julia, but it was her duty to make sacrifices for Caryl.

"Suppose we go to Banta's?" she suggested, and was rewarded by a smile from her companion.

"Good!" agreed Caryl. "You are some sport, after all, aren't you?"

Thus it came about that the two girls faced each other across the little table in the Italian restaurant. It was early, and there were few other diners there yet.

"What kind of wine?" asked the waiter. "Red or white?"

"You may not want it, but I do!" she declared. "Red wine, waiter!"

It was sour stuff she thought when she tasted it, but with Julia's anxious eyes upon her she determined to drink it. She was warm and thirsty, so she did not find it hard to gulp down the thin, acid liquid. It was not strong enough to make her feel stupid and queer as did the highball of yesterday, but it did loosen her tongue, and, as she ate, she talked more freely than usual to her sister. She did not tell her of the luncheon or the automobile excursion with Somerdyke, but she told of how she had met twice at Delaine's the author's friend whom she had already mentioned to Julia, and that, although in Delaine's apartment he had been "most polite" to her, when she had met him today walking with a stylish, fashionable girl, he had "as good as cut her."

"Just as if I wasn't good enough to talk to him!" she burst forth. "It broke me all up, Judy—it really did. It made me understand that the girl who works for her living is despised by people higher up."

"Nonsense! Nothing of the kind!" declared Julia. "You are as good as anybody else. But the girl who is as poor as you or I cannot afford to go about with men who have money and who are in an entirely different circle from us. We should confine ourselves to people in our own class. We owe that to ourselves, dear."

"I don't know," replied Julia slowly, "who are the men in our class. I do not chance to know any of them. But I do know that an educated and successful man like Mr. Delaine, and such men as his friends would naturally be, certainly are not in our class. I am sorry to have to say that, little sister, but it is true. We must meet them in business, but suppose that you and I promise each other to avoid them socially. Is that an agreement?"

The tears were too near the surface for Caryl to speak, but she shook her head obstinately.

Some Reasons for a Strong Navy

(As Urged by the Navy League.)

Sea power was indispensable to the success of the War of the Revolution.

The navy fought and won the War of 1812.

The Union was preserved, and the outcome of the War of Secession was determined as much by the blockading navy as by the army of the North.

The navy decided the outcome of the Spanish War.

England's navy has given Great Britain uninterrupted peace on the water for nearly one hundred years and her shores have not been successfully invaded for nearly one thousand years.

Germany with an adequate army and navy has been practically free from war on land or sea for forty years.

The navy has 21,000 miles of sea coast to defend.

Battleships are cheaper than battles.

Germany's prosperity and national efficiency can, to no small extent, be attributed to the training received by citizens in her army and navy.

The navy as a trade school has been called "Our Great National University." It returns to civil life annually as many trained, efficient and patriotic young men as are graduated from the five leading universities of the country.

The navy suppressed the African slave trade and piracy, and opened the doors of Japan and Korea. It protects missionaries and citizens abroad and has repeatedly rendered invaluable services in times of insurrection and earthquakes.

A modern navy can not be improvised.

"If we desire to avoid insult, we must be able to repel it," said George Washington. "If we desire to secure peace, it must be known we are at all times ready for war."

Marvels of Light and Color

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN

Q.—"Please explain the cause of the ghastly color of people's faces when near the long bright tubes of glass in photographer galleries."

A.—The long, shining tubes are mercury vapor arc lamps. Red waves of light are almost totally missing. The other colors are present, but it requires the waves of energy causing color sensations in the optic thalamus in the brain to be present in all visible lengths combined to make pure white light. These are violet, indigo, blue, green, yellow, orange and red. Take out any one of these, let the others fall on any object capable of reflecting them, then the appearance will be strange, unnatural and weird, some say ghastly, and the human face does indeed look uncanny.

An immense number of photographic experiments have been made with every kind of light, visible and invisible, with startling results. Rays of all colors have been allowed to fall on surfaces of all other colors, a strange new thing in optics. The resulting rare and beautiful effects have been viewed with the unaided eye, with the spectroscope and then photographed.

Effects entirely new have been discovered, and the fascination of it all is now luring leading physicians into new corridors within nature's splendid light-maze. By means of this series of intricate processes, hitherto unknown, short radiant-energy waves have been discovered, far and away shorter, more delicate and rapid than the shortest visible violet waves.

The absorption of invisible and therefore undiscovered undulations is a branch of research by itself and strange chemical activities have been thus detected in ultra-violet regions; force going to waste so far as man is concerned during all these centuries.

These newly discovered short waves are themselves most admirable discoverers. A series of very remarkable substances has been made by advanced experimenters—wave-filters. By their use new and extraordinary effects are obtained. Any length of waves can be sifted or filtered out, and any series whatever can be isolated and secured in a state of purity.

A wide field is now being explored. Thus a pane of clear glass sets like a wooden board to these tiny waves; it is opaque to them. But these beating waves have effect on the surface of the human body.

Weird effects are obtained by photos taken in filtered light; thus a garden full of flowers will vary in the negatives; some flowers will be invisible that show plainly in other kinds of waves. The end is not yet—merely a beginning in these new researches.

Freedom's Sunrise in Russia

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY

Fifty-three years ago Czar Alexander II. appointed the "Imperial Commission" that was to do one of the biggest pieces of work that has been done since history began.

Czar Nicholas, the father of Alexander II., had long been anxious, mainly for political reasons doubtless, to bring about the emancipation of the Serfs, but being unable to accomplish the great task he left its fulfillment to his successor. Faithful to his father's solemn injunctions, Alexander, in 1858, freed the Crown Serfs, to the number of some twenty-four millions. But that was only the half of his task, since there were millions of private Serfs, and it was for the investigation of the problem of freeing these private Serfs that Alexander appointed the "Imperial Commission," with orders to report to him at the earliest possible date. In good time the Czar got his report, and he immediately issued the famous Ukase of March 3, 1861, which transformed the twenty-five millions of Serfs into freemen.

These millions, prior to their emancipation, were "fixed to the soil," and passed with it, like chattels, from master to master. Now all was changed. They were no longer chattels, but men, whose rights the highest were bound to respect.

Not only so, but by the imperial decree which freed them from their ancient bondage they were enabled to borrow money from the government with which to buy the land on which their homes stood, with enough more of the surrounding soil to insure them the means of subsistance.

In-Shoots

When a married man is willing to take advice from a bachelor, it is an indication that he has found matrimony a failure.

Blessed is the peacemaker who can take a few knocks occasionally and not cry about it.

It is possible for a girl to wear a Mona Lisa smile and yet be too indolent to tango.

The fellow who is unable to tell a hard luck story well had better go to work.
